Editor's note: Mrs. Jaine CLOSE, mother of Mr. Richard A. CLOSE, English graduate student, spent three days in Michigan during the elections. Mrs. CLOSE has been correspon-ding with residents of Strike City and encouraging friends and organizations to assist Negroes during the same time.

In May of 1964, 18 Negro teachers and their families struck the town of Michigan, a school district in the state. The strike was called in response to a wage offer of 2% per year for the next three years. The offer was rejected by the teachers, who wanted a 10% increase.

During the strike, the teachers were supported by a large number of students and faculty members who were also involved in the Civil Rights Movement. The strike lasted for three weeks, during which time the teachers were housed in a church and were fed by volunteers.

The strike ended with the teachers receiving a wage increase of 5% per year. The teachers stated that the strike was a success because it had drawn national attention to the issue of equal pay for Negro teachers.

The strike was seen as a crucial moment in the Civil Rights Movement, as it highlighted the struggle for equal rights and opportunity. The teachers' determination and perseverance were an inspiration to many others who were fighting for their rights.

The strike also had a lasting impact on Michigan, as it helped to increase awareness of the need for equal pay for teachers in the state. The teachers' success paved the way for future negotiations and helped to ensure that the rights of teachers were respected.

The teachers' strike in Michigan was a powerful demonstration of the power of collective action and the importance of standing up for what is right.

In Northwestern, Wisconsin Games

By JOE MITCH
State News Sports Writer

In a game that was to feature a renewal of the war on the ice and battle of the books, the Northwestern Wildcats defeated the Wisconsin Badgers 1-0 Saturday.

The Wildcats were the only team in the Big Ten Conference to win in the second period, giving them an edge in the four-game series. The Badgers are without a win in the two-game series as they lost their first game 2-0 to the Northwestern Wildcats.

The Wildcats took the lead in the second period with a goal from John Roberts. Roberts scored on a power-play opportunity in the second period, when John Robinson went off for holding with a minute left in the period. The goal was the second of the series for Roberts, and it gave Northwestern a 1-0 lead.

The Wildcats then added to their lead with an empty-net goal from Skip Barber, who scored his second of the season with less than a minute left in the game. Northwestern won the game 2-0 and now lead the series 2-0.

The Wildcats have been playing well recently, and they are looking to continue their success in the Big Ten Conference. Wisconsin, on the other hand, has struggled in recent games and needs to find a way to turn things around.

The winner of this series will advance to the third round of the Big Ten Tournament, while the loser will be eliminated from the tournament. The game is crucial for both teams, and it will be interesting to see which team can come out on top.
