TOINO (UPI) — Chairman Mao Tse-tung ended speculation that he may have died by releasing 50 pictures of himself. He is 78. It was the first published appearance by the "Great Leader," who has not been photographed since 1958.

The photos, distributed by the official media, were taken in "various parts of the country" over the years. Chairman Mao has not been heard from since he flew to the United States for medical treatment for his heart in May 1971.

The pictures are expected to be distributed in various parts of the country, including universities, schools and workplaces, to help spread Mao's teachings.

More light has been shed on the official University of Michigan website regarding information from student records in a new statement issued Tuesday by Director Horace C. King.

According to the statement, students may request their academic records not to be released to almost any person, except by asking the Registrar's office in writing.

The statement reassures students that no change in the procedure for obtaining a copy of their records will occur, and that the statement follows the federal regulations and University policy.

The statement also highlights that students have the right to request a copy of their academic records from the Registrar's office, and that the records will be released only to the person who requested them in writing.

The murder of a young girl by a man who had rented a room in her home is the latest case in a string of violent crimes that have plagued the city in recent weeks. The victim, who has been identified as Mary Smith, 19, was found in her apartment with multiple stab wounds. According to witnesses, the attacker, a man named John Doe, had been living with Smith for several months and had a history of violent behavior.

Smith's death has shocked the community and has sparked renewed calls for improved public safety measures. Mayor Johnson has called for an immediate review of the police department's response to domestic violence incidents, and the city council has promised to consider a range of new measures to protect vulnerable populations.

The case has also raised questions about the effectiveness of current laws and regulations, as well as the need for better resources and support for victims of violence. The city's legal aid agency has urged residents to seek help if they are experiencing domestic abuse, and the police have increased their presence in high-risk areas to deter potential offenders.

In the meantime, the community is coming together to support the Smith family and to honor Mary's memory. A vigil is planned for later this week, and local businesses have offered to host fundraising events to help with funeral expenses.

Pryor said that since many of his executives were responsible for the railroad's operations, he was "led to believe" the company was trying to "do whatever it can to avoid running the railroad." He added that the railroad's personnel were "in a state of confusion and anger."

The once mighty Michigan bats went silent last weekend as the Spartans continued to romp. The Big Ten had no answer for two Spartan pitchers who combined to give up only four hits over the weekend.

Monday in Ann Arbor, Michigan took the first of two games with a 3-0 decision. The second game went to Michigan, 6-3.

In the opener, the Spartans scored an unearned run in the first inning, and added two more in the fourth. Michigan battled back with a run in the fifth, but the Spartans broke the game open with two more in the sixth.

Michigan suffered another loss as the Spartans notched 10 hits.

The Michigan State baseball team wrapped up their season on Saturday with a 3-2 victory over Ohio State.

Historian Reveals Himself Says Prof

By Susan Silk

The historian reveals more about himself and the time in which he relates than he does of which he writes. Robert Brown, professor of history, said the History Club Monday.

"I want to focus on the intellectual environment," Brown explained. "I'm not saying that historians are not interested in that, but there is a difference between the way they approach history and their personal experiences."

In his paper, "Dealing with the Historian," Brown discussed the role of the historian in society and how he perceives himself as an intellectual. He also touched on the importance of critical thinking and the role of the historian in the present day.

Through his own experiences in history, Brown emphasized the importance of understanding the context in which events occurred. He said that historians often work in isolation, but that it is important to remember that history is never just a single event or a single fact.

The historian's role is to provide a perspective on the past that is not influenced by the present. He explained that historians must be able to understand the motivations of those who lived in the past and how they relate to the present.

Brown concluded by stating that the historian's role is to reveal the truth about the past, not to impose their own views on it. He emphasized the importance of critical thinking and the need for historians to be open-minded in their approach to history.
