Academic freedom moves slowly toward reality

By FAYE UNGER
Staff News Writer

The academic council Tuesday gave the faculty committee or student affairs another "freedom bone" to chew on in its search for greater academic freedom. On this bone, the secretary of the faculty committee, Robert S. McNamara, said that the government of South Vietnam had shown great political courage in devaluing the Vietnamese currency last June and that inflation has been stemmed.

The council, a group including the student admirers, was concerned with student affairs and their effect on Communist morale.

The academic council premature issue an injunction at its Tuesday meeting.

ASMSU tackles 'real issues'

ASMSU's involvement in political issues, as shown by its appropriation of $1,000 to the 18-vote campaign, is an important and desirable step in a new direction for MSU's student government.

But like any new venture, it has its problems. One forceable difficulty it faces is staying out of the partisan political game. The board was elected on non-partisan campus issues. It has no mandate to become involved in partisan issues.

How realistic?

In an effort to avoid involvement in partisan issues, the Board passed a resolution last Tuesday. It stated that ASMSU will not underwrite a political candidate nor a political party; it may, however, endorse a political candidate, but only for educational purposes. This resolution is high-minded. Realistically, however, ASMSU-old vote typically underwrite a much trial and error in learning which political issues safely are bipartisan.

Another problem ASMSU faces is finding a method for gauging student support for opinion of an issue. ASMSU is a non-partisan body. It must therefore, support the issues the majority of students support.

Resolve conflict

But ASMSU must also be a political instigator, it must place the issues before the students. At the same time, it must take a stand until it has heard the view of its constituents. In appropriating $1,000 to the 18-vote campaign, the Board operated in reverse because it did not effectively gauge student opinion.

In short, ASMSU must resolve the conflict between its role as initiator and representative of the student body.

These problems and ASMSU's involvement in solving them are the costs for venturing into a new field, the costs for venturing beyond the stereotyped broad-circuits role of student government.

In our opinion, these costs are worth the potential benefits. The Board has the potential to become a student government involved in real issues.

"First circle of friends become largely politically active," Mrs. Milliken said.

From August until November it's one endless debate, she may campaign on her own or she may travel with her husband, Mr. Robert Griffin, her tallest, tallest MSU with the orienter.

As Griffin went through the crowd shaking hands and greeting people, Mrs. Griffin, a model of grace and politeness, went about her work dignifiedly. She listened to Mrs. Griffin. She understood the problems posed in her own personal space with the grosso.

There is also the kind of relationship that Mrs. Griffin and her husband, the 18-vote candidate, exist. She works outside the house.

Mrs. Griffin is a political secretary, she is a problem solving agent. She may travel with her husband. Mrs. Griffin then entertained those who trusted her services.

Whatever she says, inevitably reflects her husband's political ideas, not her own. Whatever she says, inevitably reflects her husband's political ideas, not her own. When the Spartans reached Ohio State, 10:45, the Buckles had scattered across the field, with a score of minus 25 points in their favor. The day's 47-yard punt against E. D. Free speech uproar hits Illinois campus

Controversy builds over the issue of free speech on campus, as indicated by the recent question of free speech on the Illinois State University campus. The provost, Dr. David L. Binnick, offered a number of reasons why a free forum of ideas is essential to the academic community, including the necessity for students and faculty to engage in open and honest dialogue. The issue has become particularly charged on the campus of the University of Illinois, where free speech advocates are concerned about the potential for censorship and the suppression of minority viewpoints.

The Free Speech Movement

Free speech advocates have been vocal in their opposition to what they see as a lack of intellectual freedom on the campus. They argue that the current climate of censorship is stifling the exchange of ideas and preventing students from fully engaging with the material they are studying. The movement for free speech has gained momentum in recent years, with students and faculty across the country mobilizing to defend the right to express diverse opinions and perspectives.

The University of Illinois Administration

In an effort to address these concerns, the University of Illinois Administration has taken steps to improve the climate for free speech. A task force has been established to examine the current policies and procedures related to free speech, with the goal of ensuring that all voices are heard and that the campus community is able to engage in open and respectful dialogue.

Can Christian be Communist?

New York (AP) - He was a master strategist, a great orator and a man of deep faith. His words, actions and philosophical ideas have had a profound impact on the world.

In this context, the question of whether a Christian can be a Communist arises. The answer lies in understanding the core beliefs of Christianity and Communism and how they align or conflict with each other.

Christ is often described as the teacher of the Kingdom of Heaven. He preached love, harmony, and unity, and he emphasized the importance of recognizing the divine in all living beings. His teachings include the Golden Rule: "Love your neighbor as yourself." This message emphasizes the inherent dignity and worth of every person, which is a fundamental concept in Christianity.

On the other hand, Communism is a political and economic system that is based on the idea of class struggle and the eventual creation of a classless society. It emphasizes collective ownership of property and the allocation of resources to meet the needs of all people. Communism often involves the use of force to achieve its goals, which conflicts with the principles of nonviolence and love that are central to Christianity.

While Christianity and Communism differ in their underlying principles and methods, there are also points of intersection. For instance, both systems emphasize social justice and the well-being of all members of society. However, the means by which these goals are achieved are fundamentally different.

In conclusion, while a Christian can indeed be a Communist, it would be more accurate to say that a Communist can be a Christian, as it is possible to hold both beliefs simultaneously. The challenge lies in the tension between the values of both systems and the practical implications of applying them in the real world.

WHAT IS IT?

Children from the Lansing School for the Blind were taken on a tour of the Dairy Research Plant by the East Lansing Kiwanis Club. Understanding, friendship, and service can be hard for a blind child, but it's made easier when things are explained with understanding.

NOW being featured at the Michigan State University campus is "A Dynamic Image," an exhibit of 40 photos which captures the "inner spirit" of campus life.

Legalization closer on pollution control

By MIKE BROGAN
Stetson News, Staff Writer

While members of the "Michigan Citizens for Clean Air" demonstrated outside the State Capitol on Monday in disfavor of pollution control, a similar action was occurring in Washington, D.C. these same groups are represented in the House of Representatives. The action was being taken to demand that the House at least grant a hearing on the subject of pollution control, in defiance of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision that a national policy toward that end would be in violation of the Constitution.

In Washington, the U.S. House of Representatives adopted a resolution calling for a hearing on pollution control in the House Ways and Means Committee. The resolution had been sponsored by Representatives Edward J. McMillan, D-Mich., and James G. Wright, D-Mich.

The action in Washington was aimed at putting pressure on the House to grant a hearing on pollution control. The Michigan Citizens for Clean Air group had previously been denied a hearing by the House Committee on Appropriations, which has jurisdiction over the pollution control bill.

The Michigan group, which has been active in the pollution control movement, has been working to build support for a national policy on pollution control. The group has been criticized by some for its approach, which some have termed "radical." However, the group has been successful in building a strong base of support, and its members have been influential in shaping public opinion on the issue.

The move in Washington is a significant development in the pollution control debate, as it represents a clear challenge to the House's position on the issue. The group's leaders have expressed confidence that the move will bring about a hearing on pollution control, and that the House will eventually adopt a national policy on the issue.

The move also has implications for other states, as it may lead to similar actions being taken in other states. The group has been active in a number of other states, and its success in Michigan has been influential in shaping public opinion and policy on the issue.

The Michigan group has also been working to build support for a national policy on pollution control at the federal level. The group has been working with representatives and senators to build support for a national policy, and it is hopeful that the move in Washington will bring about a hearing on the issue at the federal level.
