Sliding tuition scale aids in-state undergraduates

BY STEVE GATES
State Antitrust Director, State of Michigan

Students who are marrying, financially independent of their parents, and have received a bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university within the last three years may receive a tuition reduction of up to 25% at the University of Michigan beginning with the fall term of this school year.

This reduction is designed to encourage students to pursue higher education after marriage and to help meet the financial needs of those who may be forced to leave school to support a family.

The new tuition reduction policy applies to full-time students who have received a bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university within the last three years. It does not apply to part-time students.

The policy is part of a package of reforms that were introduced this spring and are expected to further lower tuition costs for in-state students.

Lee S. Kane, a staff writer for the Associated Press, recently reported on the success of the new tuition reduction policy at Michigan State University.

The policy, which was introduced last fall, has been praised by students and faculty alike for its ability to reduce the financial burden of higher education.

In his report, Kane notes that the reduction in tuition has allowed many students to continue their education and that the university has seen an increase in enrollment since the policy was implemented.

Kane also highlights the potential long-term benefits of the policy, including increased graduation rates and a stronger workforce.

House GOP backs move to cut spending

WASHINGTON — Congressional leaders are backing a bipartisan move they hope will win deep cuts in government spending before the end of the year.

They hope to get the measure approved by President Barack Obama for an emergency spending bill that will cover the rest of the fiscal year. House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., announced Monday that they have reached an agreement on the measure.

The agreement would cut about $42 billion in spending over the next year, including $12 billion in defense spending. It would also extend an expiring payroll tax cut for two more months and extend a program that provides unemployment benefits to millions of jobless Americans.

"We need to get this done," Boehner said in a statement. "It's time to put politics aside and work together to put our country back on track."

Petitioning is now under way for a bylaw to end student participation on student-faculty committees, but with a second ballot, the issue could become another campaign issue.

And there is an obvious need for students with a keen interest in the educational future of this University. Also, in demand is a careful screening structure to be used by AMSU in selecting students for these seats. Many months of debate preceded opening doors traditionally barred to student participation on five faculty committees and the Academic Freedom Report.

On June 6, the Academic Council approved the recommendations of the Committee on Committees, calling for partial student participation. And now, with the Academic Freedom Report in effect and a new academic year beginning, the process of filling these seats begins.

One graduate and one undergraduate student who have non-voting membership on the International Projects, Educational Policies, Curriculum, Student Affairs and Library Committees. Also, one meeting of the Academic Council each year will include students, who may make formal or informal presentations and participate in discussion and question-and-answer session.

There will be increased student-faculty communications. However, the non-voting provision will not allow the students to fully participate in the policy formulation. Even a token membership, to be more nominal, will carry full voting responsibilities.

Rejection of the idea of student membership on these committees by the Academic Council is the biggest disappointment. Opening one meeting yearly is hardly more than former policy.

Though compromised was the apparent aim of the Council and the Committee Committees, there was no concession on this point by the faculty.

Faculty members, it seems, are not yet convinced that there is a vital need for an important role in the affairs of the University to be played by students.

The formula prepared by the Committee on Committees appears to be a workable, though not completely adequate, first step. Improvement--implementation--is the next problem. The success of this first plan is nearly a prerequisite for further attempts in progress of the student involvement. Thoughtful selection of the students will ensure that the participation of the students will be given the chance at a success.

Despite the apparent token quality of this first experiment at student representation, an impressive student response now will keep alive the promise of filling the doors wider in the future.

STP drug on psychedelic frontier

By JIM SCHAEFER
State News Staff Writer

Michigan State University scientists are continuing their search for safer hallucinogenic drugs and the psychologists of Michigan State College of Human Development have long been interested in the psilocybin field.

The State Penitentiary (STP) in Lansing, Michigan is one of the institutions where STP scientists are working on developing the psychedelic drug psilocybin. Psilocybin is a naturally occurring substance found in the mushroom Psilocybe cubensis, which is commonly referred to as the "magic mushroom." The drug is known for its hallucinogenic effects, causing a range of psychological and perceptual changes in users.

The STP scientists have been working with psilocybin for several years, conducting experiments and studies to better understand its effects and potential therapeutic applications. Their work has included examining the drug's effects on mental health, cognitive function, and other psychological outcomes.

The STP scientists have also been interested in developing safer hallucinogenic drugs, which could potentially have therapeutic applications in medicine. They have been working on developing drugs that are less toxic and have fewer side effects than psilocybin.

Overall, the STP scientists are making significant contributions to the field of psychedelic research, advancing our understanding of the potential benefits and risks of these substances.
Underground plant almost complete

Several months ago the Michigan State News printed an article concerning the underground power plant at the present campus of the Michigan State College of Agriculture and Home Economics. The underground plant is almost complete and is expected to be ready for use in time for the 1967-68 term.

The underground plant will serve as a power source for the main campus and will be a major addition to the present electrical facilities. The plant will be used to supply electricity to the Electrical Engineering Department, the Agriculture and Home Economics Building, and the Student Union. The underground plant will also be used as a backup system in case of a failure of the main power source.

The underground plant will be located under the old Dairy Plant and will be operated by the Electrical Engineering Department. The plant is expected to be ready for use in time for the 1967-68 term.

The Michigan State News is pleased to report that the underground plant is almost complete and is expected to be ready for use in time for the 1967-68 term.

Soccer coach faces 'too much' offense

By NORM SAARI
State News Sports Writer

Even after his team defeated Purdue University 1-0, Saturday, Soccer Coach Gene Kenney still isn't sure about his offense — for today's game here against Calvin College at 3:30 p.m.

Kenney's big dilemma is at center forward, the position team co-captain Guy Busch has started at the past two years. But he didn't start against Purdue, but played most of the second half, and scored two goals.

"We are overloaded up front," Kenney said.

Kenney will vary offensive combinations against Calvin and probably decide something definite for the weekend game at Pittsburgh. But he isn't sure which players to use.

"All I know is that Trevor Harris will be in the lineup today versus Calvin," Busch said.

Defensively, Kenney will go with the same combination that held the Boilermakers to only six shots on goal.

Kenney will be without forward Tim Keyes, who will be out at least two more games. Keyes will play the right wing tonight and start at the right wing Saturday.
