Russia. Buddhist leaders have voiced concern that the violence could lead to a religious war in the region. They have called for dialogue and peaceful solutions to resolve the ongoing conflict.

Buddhists gain 15 seats in S. Vietnam legislature

The recent elections in Vietnam saw an increase in the number of Buddhist representatives, reflecting the growing influence of the Buddhist community in the country. The elections were significant in terms of political representation, as they allowed the Buddhist population to have a voice in legislative decisions. This growth in political representation is a positive sign for the future of religious freedom and harmony in Vietnam.

Vietnam after the march: change of direction?

A hundred thousand protesters gather at the Lincoln memorial Saturday to confront the war. The marchers’ brief message was that the war must go on, and the war must go on with even greater urgency and relentless consistency, as we have come to expect from our leaders. The marchers’ message was that the war must go on, and the war must go on with even greater urgency and relentless consistency, as we have come to expect from our leaders.

The time has come to take this message to heart. To let the North and South seriously for a settlement and a hope for peace. It is only too obvious that the course of our country chooses now is leading us nowhere but further into a senseless war, in which we seek to win a victory where there is none to be won.

Troops not asked about pullout

OUR READERS’ MINDS

To the Editor:

During the course of this letter I shall make assertions in which I would like errors, at least it by all means be done. In the first place I would like to begin with the problem of the "taking and leaving of troops" which are the subject of the discussion.

I often wonder why the government is asking us to join in this war. I know of no other way of doing it than by paying for it. We are being asked to believe that the government is not at fault for this war, but that it is we who are at fault for it. We are being asked to believe that the government is not at fault for this war, but that it is we who are at fault for it.

In conclusion, I would like to say that the government is not at fault for this war, but that it is we who are at fault for it.

Vietnem minority tyrants

In the State News of May 15, Mr. H. H. Blanton, editor of the American Press of the University of Virginia, wrote the following:

"I believe that the minority is the most powerful force in the world. It is the ideal on which our country was founded and which has made us the greatest nation in the world. The government is the responsibility to help free oppressed peoples everywhere. It is the difference of this nation on which we must base this responsibility, to see what we can do to make it better.

If you work toward making the "hate" less hate, before you can start, you must clear your mind of all illusions and all prejudices. If you work toward making the "hate" less hate, before you can start, you must clear your mind of all illusions and all prejudices.

We are not asking for any more than the present minority is asking for. We are asking for the same rights that we have had before. We are not asking for any more than the present minority is asking for. We are asking for the same rights that we have had before.

RELIGIOUS INNOCENCE AND CIVIC SCIENCE: THE RELIGIOUS ORIGINS OF MODERN SCIENCE

By DIANNE S. MOORE

University of Michigan

How did science become a secular endeavor? How did it separate from religious authority and become a separate sphere? This talk will explore the religious origins of modern science, focusing particularly on the role of religious thought and the role of religious institutions in the development of modern science. It will argue that the development of modern science was not simply a matter of technological advancement, but was also a product of religious change and reform. It will examine the role of religious leaders, such as the Jesuits, in promoting the development of modern science, and the ways in which religious thought influenced scientific ideas and practices. It will also consider the ways in which modern science has shaped religious thought and practice.

Vet lab easy--with coeds

By CHARLOTTE CONRAD

Two coeds bring a feminine touch to daily laboratory dissections when they fill out the classroom census list for the first course in the MU veterinary curriculum. Elizabeth J. Davis, Cape, junior, Karlays, To Lutes, of the 3rd year, and Valerie, Oates, of the 4th year, are currently the only two women in 40% of the 150 students enrolled in the Animal Sciences Department.

UCD in 3500 Popular Entertainment will screen "Sensations" and "Seducing" at 6 p.m. Friday at the J. E. McCleary Auditorium. The 40% will be dressed in costume during entertainment.

"The only one who watches the women's origin is a mystery," stated a zoo official. "But there is a chance that the women's origin may be traced to a glamour model."

"No one can predict whether the origin will be traced to a glamour model."
