Eased dress rules passed; women's halls to set policy

By LINDA GORMAN
State News Staff Writer

A proposed change in dress regulations at Michigan State University is scheduled to take effect this fall. The changes, which are expected to create some controversy, were presented in a meeting of the University Women's Council last week.

The proposed changes, which would allow women to wear pants or skirts, were introduced by Miss Alice Adam, president of the council. Miss Adam said the new regulations are designed to provide more freedom of choice for women.

The council has been meeting to discuss the issue for several months, and Miss Adam said she believes it is important that women be able to express their own individuality through their clothing.

The proposed changes would allow women to wear pants or skirts, regardless of their size, as long as the clothing is appropriate for the occasion. MISS ADAM SAI

SN--Daily clash today

The annual grudge match between the Michigan Daily and the State News is scheduled for 3 p.m. today on Endy Field at Ferry Field.

The game will be played under standard college rules with a four-man Decathlon. Any infractions by the Daily are being set up for the convenience of spectators.

The Daily has 11 registered officers, including a full-strength cheerleading team, and the State News, 26. But the Daily News is out for revenge in this first game of the season, as no Michigan Annual has ever scored in the Decathlon.

The Daily newspaper sales will be taken in by four Daily News editors whose scores for one day will be the basis for their scores on the Decathlon.

Exceptions to amnesty prove Soviet's rule

On the Eve of the 50th anniversary of the October Revolution, the Soviet government has announced the amnesty for minor criminals in the Russian jails. The list of exceptions, however, is extensive.

Notably the writers, Andrei D. Sinyavsky and Yuri I. Galperin, whose trial last year caused a world-wide outcry, remain in prison. The Soviet government, it seems, still considers the viewpoints of the two dissidents to be so dangerous that they cannot suppress free expression of thought.

Sinyavsky and Galperin were convicted in February, 1966, under a law prohibiting "seditious agitation and propaganda." They had published satirical writings about the government.

The amnesty granted by the Soviet government applied to those who had not participated in any open political activity, but did not apply to "especially serious crimes against the state." This means that Sinyavsky and Galperin, who were convicted of "seditious agitation and propaganda," were not included.

Sinyavsky, a writer of great talent, has been a leading critic of the Soviet regime. Galperin, a poet, is also known for his anti-Soviet views.

The amnesty is part of a larger policy of leniency by the Soviet government, which has recently released a number of political prisoners.

Legal abortions: time is now

In the United States, the right to a safe and legal abortion is a fundamental right. However, in many countries, access to legal abortion is limited or nonexistent.

The Women's Health Protection Act (WHPA), introduced in Congress in 2021, would protect the right to a safe and legal abortion. It would also prohibit states from passing laws that impose restrictions on abortion services.

The WHPA is supported by a majority of Americans and by many medical organizations. It is also supported by the Supreme Court.

The government is expected to take action on the WHPA in the coming weeks. It is crucial that we continue to support this legislation and advocate for access to legal abortion for all.

Vietnam: a dark tunnel

The war in Vietnam continues with little hope of an end in sight. The United States has poured billions of dollars into the war, but it has achieved little.

The Viet Cong, supported by North Vietnam, continues to grow in strength. The United States has been criticized for its use of napalm and other agents of war.

The war has caused immense suffering and loss of life. It is time for the United States to seek a peaceful solution to the crisis in Vietnam.

Find a topic, or perish

As a writer, it is important to find a topic that is relevant and interesting to your readers. A topic that is too narrow or too broad can make your writing less effective.

To find a topic, consider your audience and their interests. Think about the current events and the issues that are affecting people today.

Once you have found a topic, narrow it down to a specific subject. This will help you to focus your research and writing.

'Snot-nosed kid' has aged

To the Editor:

I've been informed that Mr. Lake had been involved in some recent activities that raised some concerns. I believe that the accuracy of this information is important to a well-informed public. Mr. Lake, as you yourself have admitted, is not a person of the highest integrity. I believe that the public would be better served by knowing the facts.

In recent years, Mr. Lake has been involved in several sales activities around the country. He has sold a variety of products, including the latest offering from his company, the "Lake Special." It is clear that Mr. Lake's business practices are not as thorough as they might be.

In conclusion, I believe that the public should be made aware of these facts. I urge you to publish this letter in your newspaper in order to meet your responsibility to the public.

Sincerely,

NOBEL WINNERS

By CHRIS LED

New York Staff Writer

The discipline of physics and chemistry, which have been developing over the last 100 years, have produced a number of Nobel Prizes, awarded for work in these fields.

The Nobel Prizes for Chemistry were awarded to two scientists, one for his work in atomic physics and the other for his work in molecular biology. The two scientists are: John Hebb and Max Perutz.

Hebb was awarded the prize for his work in atomic physics, and Perutz was awarded the prize for his work in molecular biology. Perutz's work was recognized for his work in the field of protein chemistry, and Hebb's work was recognized for his work in the field of atomic physics.

Perutz was also awarded the prize for his work in the field of molecular biology, which was based on his work with the enzyme called DNA. DNA is a molecule that contains the genetic information of a living organism.

Hebb also received the prize for his work in the field of atomic physics, which was based on his work with the atom and its structure.

The prizes were awarded to recognize the contributions of these scientists to their respective fields, and to encourage further research and development in these areas.

The prizes were presented at a ceremony in Stockholm, Sweden, on December 10.

With the addition of energy that has been created in the course of the universe, new ways of thinking about the nature of reality are being explored. The new energy is known as the "dark matter," which is believed to be a form of energy that is not detectable by any known means.

One of the most important aspects of dark matter is its role in the formation of galaxies and large-scale structures. Scientists believe that the dark matter is responsible for the gravitational effects that we observe in the universe.

The dark matter is thought to be composed of particles that are not yet known to science. Some scientists have proposed that these particles could be "weakly interacting massive particles," or WIMPs.

One of the current research goals is to develop new experiments to detect WIMPs. These experiments are being conducted at laboratories around the world, including the Fermi Gamma Ray Space Telescope, which is located in New Mexico.

The Fermi Telescope is equipped with an instrument called "LAT," which is designed to detect gamma rays. Gamma rays are high-energy photons that are emitted by certain particles, such as WIMPs.

In addition to looking for WIMPs, the Fermi Telescope is also studying other phenomena, such as black holes and neutron stars.

The telescope is expected to provide important insights into the nature of the universe and the role of dark matter in its formation and evolution.
James Coburn - over his head in 'Waterhole'

The State Movieland black-on-yellow poster for "Waterhole" reads: "The least possible effect..." and depicts a man with a gun in his hand. The tagline for the movie is: "The Russians Are Coming! The Russians Are Coming!"

James Coburn, who plays a Russian agent, is driven to ludicrous extremes in this farce. The movie is a comedy of errors, with Coburn attempting to outsmart his American counterparts. Coburn's character, a former Russian spy, becomes entangled in a web of misunderstandings and miscommunications.

"Waterhole" is a lighthearted, tongue-in-cheek take on espionage, featuring Coburn in a variety of situations where he fails to outmaneuver his American counterparts. The movie was a box office success and is remembered for its exaggerated performances and comedic misunderstandings.

Coburn's character, a former Russian spy, becomes entangled in a web of misunderstandings and miscommunications. The movie is a classic example of Cold War comedy and is a testament to Coburn's comedic timing and ability to deliver a punchline.

Throughout the movie, Coburn's character, known as "The Russian," attempts to outsmart his American counterparts but is repeatedly thwarted by their superior knowledge and resourcefulness. The movie is a lighthearted look at the Cold War era and the complexities of espionage.

"Waterhole" was directed by John Huston, who was known for his distinctive style and ability to create a sense of tension and suspense. The movie was well-received by audiences and critics alike, and Coburn's performance as "The Russian" is often cited as one of his best.

English Stonehenge: 'primitive computer'

By JEAN HARDEN

"Stone, Moon and Monsters" is the current presentation at Detroit Planetarium, located in the Piquette Avenue Armory. This presentation features "a primitive computer" made up of hundreds of stones.

A part-time employee, Matthew, explains that the computer is "made of stones" and is "a primitive computer," meaning the computer is made up of stones.

The stones are arranged in a circular pattern, with a large stone in the center and smaller stones surrounding it. The stones are also arranged in a straight line, with a long stone at the end.

The presentation is presented by the Planetarium and is open to the public. The presentation is expected to last for about 15 minutes and is free to the public.
