Supreme Court kills loyalty oath

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court upheld Maryland's loyalty oath for public employees constitutionally valid.

The ruling came in a 6-3 decision over Justice William J. Douglas, while the other justices found that the oath did not violate the First Amendment's freedom of speech and religion guarantees.

Douglas said the oath was a "clear and present danger" to the constitution and the state of Maryland.

The majority's opinion was written by Justice Felix Frankfurter, who said the oath was not a burden on the state's citizens.

NMU: the lessons of a struggle

NMU demonstrators at Spartan Stadium Saturday: a need for all universities to develop procedures for handling student complaints concerning unfinished dormitories; and giving advice and encouragement to citizen groups in Marquette who opposed expansion plans of the university.

It is this latter charge which faculty leaders and students have been working on. The university president's statement could be seen as a response to the legalization of student protests. Money was collected, a boycott of classes on Monday was organized, and the student protest group, the Associated Students of Marquette University, has promised to bring suits in behalf of McCollum's students.

The controversy revolves around the firing of assistant professor James G. Standlee by the president's order yesterday. The administration cited several reasons for his dismissal. Included were the critical comments he made in a required course on the history of the African continent, as well as his refusal to go to classes on Monday, which he thought might be corporal punishment of students. The administration has not reconsidered the case.

In this, the particular significance of the struggle is the problem of the power of the university, the college, the university president, over students. If the administration does not reconsider the case, it will mean that the university has the power to control the influence of the student movement.

The administration has not reconsidered the case. The university, the college, the university president, have the power to control the influence of the student movement.

India: no substitutes for freedom

By D. R. Shams, Washington correspondent

India is facing a new phase in its struggle for freedom. India is going through a phase of internal reforms and liberalization. India is facing the task of reconciling the demands of the people for freedom with the need for social reform.

I am not sure if the people of India are satisfied with the progress that has been made in the last six years. The people of India have been looking for a change in their political and social system.

Student suicide rate low at MSU

The suicide rate at Michigan State University has been on the decline since 1968, when 11 or 12 cases were reported, according to Philip Feurig, director of the School of Social Work.

Feurig said the decrease in suicides is due to a number of factors, including increased public awareness, better mental health services, and more effective prevention efforts.

Ozarks take ride on pork-barrel

In the fiscal year which started July 1, spending on the 454 pork-barrel projects planned or in progress will add up to $200 million. That compares with almost $1 billion spent the last fiscal year. The pork-barrel projects this year include supplying federal judges with a $3 billion bridge to exceed his standing by the levee.

Today a $200 billion increase in the national pork-barrel projects is forecast for the fiscal year. The projects are distributed in the states of the bluff. The country, a power dam, scientific lake and reservoirs facilities.

Projects now under way or to be included in the plan include: engineering, dams, hydroelectric and irrigation projects throughout the country.

A report to Congress this year predicts that a congressman will be protected for transporting pork-barrel projects in his district and that the public service will not be harmed.

There were no major changes, with a few exceptions. The service only differs from last year's report in the budget breakdown of the total pork-barrel program.

A major reason for the absence of many pork projects in this report is the concern of the pork-barrel committee to maintain the federal pork-barrel program.

Keysoing Bluff

Keysoing Bluff, the principal island of the Great Lakes National Park, will not get a billion dollars. That area has been voted down. The pork-barrel committee has included the port's $2 million for the area.

The pork-barrel committee has also included the west's $2 million for the port. It has also included the east's $2 million for the port.

Projects in the pork-barrel list are expected to be the same as last year's report. The pork-barrel committee will not release the list until the fiscal year

Mascots: faithful creatures in the homes of Greeks

There's nothing like a mascot to make a team "one of the boys," and many UIU University men and women have learned to be proud of their respective teams over the years. No longer are they just a part of the homecoming football game, but they have a place in the heart of every student in the university.

The mascot tradition at UIU is a long one, and the tradition has been carried over to the new student body as well. The tradition also extends to the university's athletic teams, and the students are proud to have their mascots in the stands with them.

The mascot tradition is not limited to the students, however. The faculty and staff at UIU have also adopted mascots, and they are just as proud to have their own mascots as the students are.
