Strike ends in Memphis

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The members of a throwback to the 1930s city garbage collection strike have ended their dispute with the city, it was announced today.

"The agreement was reached Thursday night after a meeting between the city council and union representatives," said City Attorney Daniel C. Gremillion.

The 13-member city council, in a special session, gave the go-ahead for the agreement which was described as a "fair and equitable" one.

The city council, in a statement, said it was seeking to be "responsive to the needs of the community and its employees." It thanked the union for its "constructive" role in the negotiations.

The strike, which started in April, involved 1,300 duty garbage collectors.

"We are pleased to have come to an agreement," said Mayor Gordon L. Thomas.

"This agreement will provide for a "fair and equitable" wage structure and other benefits for the city's workers." He added that the city "does not want to see a continuation of this kind of strike activity."

Late library hours: refusal and challenge

The decision to postpone indefinitely an extension of library hours is a most disappointing one. It is disappointing because this fall, and it is disappointing because all of us have an interest in seeing whether things will be different next year.

The arguments have been long and involved on both sides. Rich and R. Chang, director of the library, has said that it would be too expensive, and that the staff for the later hours could not be found. In answer it has been said that the idea should not be given up until some plans could be tried. At one time ASMSU seemed willing to try to do something about this. The work-study program is always a possibility, the part-time students. The pros and cons have been debated around with the hope that the library is open for a while. It is a near certainty that the opposition to late hours will be there. Whether the effort to keep the library open for a while is a good idea, will be another question.

Even in this negative light, however, the only hope for later library hours now lies in the future. The matter will be taken up with the students on a short notice. There is then a very clear issue of the decision made by the Black Students Association (BSA) class. As to whether it is wise or not to attempt to work out something. Now, as far as has been disclosed, has been an opposition to the library open for a while. The pros and cons have been debated with the hope that the library will be open if at all possible. It is a near certainty that the opposition to late hours will be there. Whether the effort to extend them can be kept will be another question.

To the Editor:

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., died last week at the age of 39 years. He was not a man of conventional standards of body, mind, and destiny and conformity. He was the kind of man who could not be satisfied with conventional statements when his life was so full of meaning. What he saw, felt, and knew he gave to others; he was not afraid of his own shadow. His actions and words were characterized by the uniqueness of imaginative love for another. Perhaps the following excerpt is from a talk given by Dr. King on April 4, 1967, exactly one year before his death:

"It is not enough to dream and laud in community, in response to a crisis, to correct the injustices that must be immediately corrected and the inequalities that must be immediately removed. More, because of yesterday's events, we have been forced to reconfigure our priorities because we have too readily assumed that there will be no American without continuous pursuit of the dream.

The reason is that no one of the groups could stop the death of Martin Luther King. Nor can they, by themselves, do anything about the great numbers of people and the great numbers of people and the great numbers of people who must endure and have dehumanization. The man who could have best led all the groups and the individuals has left the scene. He is the man who loved his enemies so that he died for them."

Dr. King carried this principle of non-violent love very consciously into his own involvement in Vietnam and beyond this into a prophetic awareness of the needed revolution in the mind of man.

Perhaps the following excerpt is a beauty never recognized by the America's most famous for quality diamond rings. Famous for quality diamond rings. Famous for quality diamond rings. Famous for quality diamond rings. Famous for quality diamond rings. Famous for quality diamond rings. Famous for quality diamond rings.

Groups fighting for the American dream— ministers, welfare workers, SCLC, SNCC, SBA. Yesterday they were young, with a vision and a beauty never recognized before together. Just churchmen fighting for the American dream’s dream—peace. Who, how, who, what, how were they perceived? How are they perceived today? The answer is: SCLC, SNA, KAOS, American Foreign Relations associations among other things. Kennedy for President, McCarthy for President YMCAs, etc.

Astroof--a coming look for MSU's fields

By TOM ELLISON

The installation of artificial turf in the I.M. fields and the commissioning of other athletic facilities in the I.M. complex will soon become a reality.

Members of the athletic department are now exploring the possibilities of various types of artificial surfacing and their usefulness at MSU.

A small pilot project at the Grand River complex and a recently installed artificial surface at the Alumni's Field for the football team are among the experimental models which MSU is now examining.

Albion Coach Morley Fraser feels playing MSU is beneficial because we feel we can learn from the best.

Newly equipped guerrillas attack U.S. jungle fighters

SAIGON (AP) — Newly equipped guerrillas have attacked U.S. jungle fighters in the Mekong Delta, a Viet Cong official said today.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the guerrillas had received fresh supplies of weapons and ammunition from North Vietnam.

In the meantime, U.S. forces have reported that they have subdued a Viet Cong attack in the area.

The official said the guerrillas had attacked a U.S. firebase in the Mekong Delta area, killing at least 20 U.S. soldiers and wounding more than 50.

The official added that the attack was part of a broader effort by the Viet Cong to disrupt U.S. operations in the area.

The U.S. forces have been reinforcing their defenses in the Mekong Delta to meet the increasing threat from the guerrillas.

The official said the attack was the latest in a series of guerrilla attacks on U.S. forces in the area.

The attacks have been escalating in recent weeks, with the Viet Cong launching a series of attacks on U.S. bases and supply lines.

The U.S. forces have been responding with increased air and ground operations to counter the guerrillas.

The official said the guerrillas had been able to take advantage of the lack of effective air support in the area.

The U.S. forces have been struggling to maintain control in the area, with the guerrillas able to launch attacks with little interference.

The official said the attacks were expected to continue, with the guerrillas seeking to disrupt U.S. operations and unsettle the local population.

The U.S. forces have been mounting a major offensive in the area, with thousands of troops and planes deployed to counter the guerrillas.

The official said the guerrillas had been able to take advantage of the lack of effective air support in the area, with the U.S. forces unable to effectively counter the guerrilla attacks.

The official said the attacks were expected to continue, with the guerrillas looking to disrupt U.S. operations and unsettle the local population.

MANN, Fla. "To regard the use of wild-haired, sullen-faced youth, which a revolution brings, he felt that the society benefited which a new system brings." He considered the inefficiency of the system, "as a result of revolt. "This is a revolution," he said. The talk will follow a lunch meeting in Room B of the Crossroads Cafeteria.
