BOOKSTORE ARREST

Student shoplifters fined

A pair of MSU students were fined $100 each after pleading guilty in Meridian Township Justice Court Friday on a charge of simple larceny from the MSU Bookstore. James H. Swartz, East Wilson Hall, and James F. Wilson, also freshmen, were also ordered to establish under a new Michigan law that stipulates that 10 per cent of the fine go for that purpose. Judge James Edgar suspended upon payment of the fine.

The loss incurred by the bookstore as a result of their shoplifting is difficult to quantify, but it is estimated that about half the display of books and other merchandise are lost to shoplifters. The bookstore is one of the busiest in the state, and the loss of merchandise can be staggering.

The defense of the MSU soccer team passed the first major test with flying colors as the Spartan hooters won their third game in a row over the Detroit Tigers yesterday and a three game to one lead in the National League. It became official when they defeated the Tigers with a 10-1 win over the Detroit Tigers yesterday.

Saturday as Jim Gibbard's young players, 2-8-2, on the IU golf course. It ended the seven-meet win streak of 1967 conference champ Indiana.

Junior Chuck Starkey will receive 'Spartan of the Week' Award, Monday. For his seventh place effort, Starkey was not the only possible spoiler, if not a contender, if not in as good shape as the others.

The sophomore-laden Spartans took second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth on the IU golf course. It equalled the entire 1967 record. Their five consecutive whitewashes in their last two games of the 1967 season broke the old record of five straight shutouts set in 1964.

Starkey said. "I was especially pleased with our defense this year, especially with the way the defense handled Chicago Circle as he tallied early in the first quarter. The centerman scored one goal toward the open goal that was stopped by a Chicago defender. Starkey then turned the ball back to Illinois-Chicago and scored the final point in the first quarter. Two Kelly scored late in the second period as Domes Donnesi and Kelly assisted on a Keary goal scored on the second period.

"Our defense is shaping up for a possible spoiler, it is a good team in most aspects of the game. I am returning to the road of errors in Big Ten cross country in which Chicago hooters rule. It gave me a reminder of the game became official when they defeated the Tigers with a 10-1 win over the Detroit Tigers yesterday.

The show was well-performed and the characters were well-drawn. Terry's comic timing was sharp and effective. Also, his ability to entertain and present the various conflicts and exchanges is well done. The show is a very good play. The Butterfield performances are a good feature. It may not be the Great White Mystery, but in the customary theatre for local stage entertainments, even if it is in romantic and bizarre comedy.

Paul Butterfield's Blues. He could be heard and understood. His voice was clear and strong. The harmonica was played with skill. His personal manner added to the performance. The sound of the group is unique. The musicians were recognizable and yet the music remained fresh. His passion for the blues tradition was apparent. Butterfield, who once studied classical music, has his roots in the blues tradition. His sound is summed by his closing number, "Kudich." The Butterfield performance was intense and yet part of the blues tradition. He demonstrated a complete control over his instrument. He presented two hours of original music. More Rapid Reading Rate Aids Students

Faster reading and improved comprehension are stressed in the Revolutionary Method offered by Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics as a means of increasing the reading efficiency of students and college students. With the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics method, it is possible to improve the reading speed of anyone who is literate, whether they are students, business executives, housewives, or anyone else who wants to improve their reading efficiency.

The method involves breaking down paragraphs into syllables and only reading the first two or three syllables of each word. This technique allows the reader to read at a much faster pace without sacrificing comprehension.

The results of using the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics method have been remarkable. Students who have taken the course have reported increases in their reading speed of up to ten times their original speed. Some have even reported being able to read entire novels in a single day.

The Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics method has been endorsed by prominent figures in various fields. For example, President Kennedy has recommended the method to his aides, and Malcolm X has praised it as a way to increase reading speed.

The Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics method has been taught at the University of Utah, and has been used by various organizations to improve the reading efficiency of their employees. The method has been shown to be effective for a wide range of people, from students to business executives.

In conclusion, the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics method is a revolutionary approach to improving reading efficiency. It has been endorsed by prominent figures and has been shown to be effective for a wide range of people. If you want to improve your reading speed, give the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics method a try.

Protesters stage election offensive

NEW YORK - With the presidential election only weeks away, inflation and peace organizations across a broad spectrum have been planning a "tail election offensive" seeking a new poll of public opinion on the issues swirling around the presidential race that began in Chicago and climaxed through the inauguration in January.

The National Mobilization to End the War in Vietnam, known as "Mobe," a loosely formed organization which has coordinated large demonstrations in major cities and has made the Vietnam war a campaign issue, is one group whose leaders believe that the most useful education experience is being able to read at a faster pace.

Mobe leaders say they are calling on students to "find new ways of voting this year in the classroom, on the streets and on the campus" since voting for one of the three major candidates gives them no chance to vote for ending the Vietnam war.

At an initial planning session this week in New York, Paul Foster, a former SDS president who is now on the Mobe staff, said the idea of the organization is scoring a " unset scan of antiwar demonstrations in polling places.

The thrust of the activities, he said, will be to link the existing war in Vietnam with the American educational system and "to score a defeat of the education process." The tactics include supporting a boycott of the voting process, as well as supporting other antiwar political groups.

The important point about Mobe, according to a recent report by the National Organization for Women, "is that it provides a chance for students to vote, if they so choose, outside the system."

Welfare Rights Organization (WRO) was not too happy with the welfare organization's denial of food stamp benefits.

"If necessary, I'll knock on the door of the welfare office and say, 'I'm hungry,'" said Stewart. Several of the welfare recipients objected to the system's policy of denying benefits to anyone who lived outside their county. Typically, they said, they had to move when Oklahoma bought the property for a parking lot. She moved to Logan Street in West Lansing, where she lived for three years with no yard for her children to play in.

The WRO was not the only one to have a problem with the system. One woman had a hard time finding a decent place to live with the aid of welfare benefits and refused to rent to a woman with children at all. She said she was moving to a different area.

In conclusion, the lack of affordable housing and the denial of benefits to those who live outside their county in the West Lansing area is a major issue that needs to be addressed.
