Students must take 'sour grapes' stand

The American community does not, unfortunately, place sufficient significance on grapes. But when the purchase of grapes, in particular—California grapes—affects the well-being of thousands of farm workers, the significance of this is of great importance to be neglected.

The main dispute between the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee and the growers in California is that the growers in support of strike workers, the growers have continued to supply food stores throughout the country with the fruit in question.

What is particular distressing is the fact that MUC, nor our chosen many grapes which come from California, and these are served to the students living in the residence halls. It must be emphasized that students should not eat these grapes of wrath.

With this student boycott of grapes, the workers strike would only have become more acute, some for sure. This farm workers have been unjustly credited with wages by the growers.

Laud, the majority of the MUC Board of Trustees, expressed Monday's his support for the grape boycott. He said, "We are disappointed in the fact that this action may take a while to be effective, but we are confident that our efforts will be fruitful in the long run."

Another round of the MUC trustees favorite game. Contingency of Interest, with MUC Trustee Philip J. May the apparent loser.

It is unfortunate, however, that this situation took on the monstrous propensities. It has resulted in the obvious damage to May's reputation, since he is probably guilty of only Weiss deporting from his wife's stock in the Philomath Cooperative, which contracts to the University of Massachusetts.

May's guilt was a case of being long-sighted over nearsighted implications. His judgment neglected the matter; but perhaps it could have been handled with less anxiety and more judgment.

It is fortunate, however, that he was allowed to resolve with an element of respect left before the new democratically controlled board takes over, unaccompanied by any political comment.

May has handled the bulk of the financial proceedings of the University for the last 20 years and his performance in this period would not have warrants stripping him of all honors and duties.

Certainly May is not alone in his guilt. He led the unfortunate situation. The entire affair was blown way outside of the presses by making up stories, myths of who have themselves not been proven. It is the time to attack for Conflict of Interest in the pot.

The u-mage done to the University is a perfect example of this. I wonder how many know that May's reputation, not the many who would have been interested in their political comment.

The University will be completing with the boycott now taking place in Detroit as well as in other areas. In the present "college" of grapes could be drained on the University, then the University will be a major contributor to the forces against the workers.

Only by all of these efforts in buying California grapes and doing by means of members of the University, the workers to their rightful place.

An unscientific effort, and a misguided reaction is the key to success.

A word from our sponsor

Earlier last week one might have been surprised to find the first MUC Board of Trustees meeting in session. A week after the student vote for a boycott of California grapes, the faculty and students of the University Forum met to discuss the many issues surrounding the boycott.

The boycott has been adopted by the MUC Board of Trustees and the students, and is supported by the faculty. The boycott is in response to the growing concern over the treatment of farm workers in California, which the University feels is not justifiable.

The boycott is designed to bring attention to the plight of farm workers and to put pressure on the university to take action. The boycott is also a way for us to show our support for the workers and to stand in solidarity with them.

The boycott is not without its challenges, however. There are concerns about the impact on the university's budget and the potential for shortages in the food supply. However, the University is committed to the boycott and to supporting the workers.

As the boycott continues, we will continue to monitor the situation and take steps to ensure that the University is fulfilling its obligations to support the workers. We will also continue to communicate with the students, faculty, and staff to keep them informed of any changes in the situation.

Grape issue everyone's concern

On leadership

You have to admit the cautious nature of the boycott which by not putting themselves in the palm of the workers' hands to the extent they cannot be picked at. Much as they cannot help themselves, the white ones are also to be able to help the workers. United States with 100,000 Monthly worker cards and economic conditions, workers are to be able to help the workers. Workers are to be able to help themselves.

To the Editor:

It is difficult to understand the meaning of the statement: "This is the best way to get the workers to vote for the boycott." The workers are to be able to vote for the boycott. The workers are to be able to help themselves.

Hopes darken for trapped miners

Some of the survivors of the Coal-Miner's Strike of 1968 were asked by the government to discuss the possibility of negotiations.

Rep. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., said Monday that the miners were asking for a meeting with President Ford to discuss the possibility of a settlement.

The miners have been on strike for six months, demanding higher wages and better working conditions.

Wallop said he was told by the union that the miners were willing to return to work if their demands were met.

He said the government had been trying to negotiate a settlement for months, but the miners had refused to return to work without a written agreement.

The miners have been suspended from work by the state government, but they have continued to receive their benefits.

The strike has caused a major economic downturn in the area, with many mines shutting down and thousands of workers losing their jobs.

State Council, the governmental body of Michigan State University, had a student affairs meeting on the recent student protests and issues that have been happening on campus.

The major topics of the discussion included the recent protests at the state Capitol, the students' reaction to the new education bill, and the availability of financial aid to students.

The meeting was attended by about 100 students, who were largely seated in a circle.

The state council, led by the president, discussed the issues at hand and attempted to address the concerns of the students.

The meeting was well attended and everyone had an opportunity to express their views.

The state council has promised to follow up on the issues discussed and to keep the students informed.

The meeting lasted for about an hour and a half and was concluded with a round of applause.

Prof study teaches needs in African high schools

Hansen and Fendt expect the study to provide current information on teacher needs in African countries and to provide guidance for teacher recruitment.

The study was recently completed in collaboration with the University of Michigan and was funded by the Ford Foundation.

The study found that there is a critical need for teachers in African high schools.

In addition, the study found that the current pool of teachers is not sufficient to meet the needs of the region.

The study also found that the salaries of teachers in African high schools are low and that many teachers are leaving the profession.

Hansen and Fendt are currently working on the development of a new teacher recruitment plan that will address these issues.

Financial support for the project comes from the Ford Foundation and the University of Michigan.

The project is one of several initiatives that the University is undertaking to improve education in African countries.

Drugs reflect lack of communication

By DONNA WHITES State News Staff Writer

The initial impetus of drugs often develops from a lack of communication between the user and the people who care about the user, according to a professor at Michigan State University.

Dr. Dennis-Geber is the founder and director of Odyssey House, a drug rehabilitation center in New York City, and he has noticed that one of the main causes of drug addiction is a lack of communication.

He also suggests that many addicts are unable to return to society because of the psychological and emotional aspects of drugs, but the legal element is not the main issue.

Also offering views on the drug scene is a journalist who has studied the drug problem extensively and has written an article for Odyssey House. The rehabilitative program, which began in January 1969, is run by the New York City government and has received much attention.

The program is designed to help addicts get off drugs and return to society without legal action.

Dr. Dennis-Geber observed that no drugs are allowed on the premises, and addicts are taught to live without drugs.

He agrees that the program is making progress in changing some addicts' lives.

"Drug rehabilitation centers of all kinds," he said, "are making progress."

"But," he added, "the program is not a panacea."

Dr. Dennis-Geber said that some addicts may be able to change their lives through the program, but others may not.

"Some may be able to change their lives," he said, "but others may not."

"Drug rehabilitation centers are only one part of the solution," he added. "The whole community must be involved."
