"U" judiciary considers election fight in MHA

By BRUCE MEAD

The U-M Student Government has filed a lawsuit challenging the validity of the MHA election. The suit claims that the MHA election was conducted in violation of Michigan's Open Meetings Act, and that the MHA candidates were not properly endorsed by the U-M Student Government. The case will be heard in the Michigan Court of Appeals.

Dean charges Gaskin ignored right channels

By LINDA GORMAN

State Sens. Jim Stamas (R-Lansing) and John Versteele (R-Lansing) accused MHA Dean Scott Gaskin of ignoring the proper channels for handling student concerns. The senators said that Gaskin has failed to respond to their requests for information on student complaints, and that he has not taken steps to address the issues.

Colleges vary on student rights

By NOTCH MILLER

In 1963, a group of college students, led by St. Louis University student Bill Bartholomew, marched to the White House in support of civil rights. The march was one of the early protests against racial segregation in the United States. Since then, colleges and universities have taken different approaches to student rights and obligations.

Board launches 'Great Turnover'

By DEBORAH FELT
Assistant Campus Editor

Organizations have one thing in common - the people behind the scenes. The ASMSU president is one of those people. For the spring term, the ASMSU president will be a sophomore.

The election process is not a simple matter of votes and tallying, but an exercise in democracy. This process is facilitated by the student government, who is in charge of overseeing the entire election process, which has always begun in preparation for the election one day.

Students who wish to run for any of these offices begin with the review of regulations and procedure. They must sign petitions to ensure they meet all requirements before they can circulate petitions and complete a candidate statement. A student who wishes to run for a position in the student government must have two signatures on their petition, which are to be submitted to the students union secretary.

In an attempt to clarify regulations and procedures, there has been a student government available for students to ask questions and receive information. The regulations and procedure are designed to ensure that anyone who wishes to run has the opportunity to do so.

Pardon urged for Ferris students

Ferris State University Senate passed a motion Tuesday to grant amnesty to Bill Clark and three other students who were arrested on the campus the night after the student walkout Tuesday night.

The resolution, which speaks of the campus from the state capital, stated: "We are sure that in the same time that approximately 500 students demonstrated at the National Guard Armory in Lansing on Monday night, the students were arrested in the campus' criminal activity.

WESTBOUND

The Senate, all Democrats, said it would appoint a committee to "investigate into meaningful dialogue with all students, black and white, to resolve their problems and our problems."

House Republicans, however, took a stand Tuesday against legislation "amending in the right of college campuses during emergency sessions."

"We're not sure how much more trouble comes out of it," said Rep. John Folts of Grand Traverse at a news conference following the Republican caucus.

Ferris State College, with a student body of 2,600, is one of the 50 out of 6,000 students, has been the scene of disorders since last Thursday and Friday when 12 persons were injured in skirmishes between whites and blacks on campus.

The students involved in the disorders were identified only as V. Wilson, representing lesbians, and Vic Wilson, who were arrested for the disorder and were released.

Brown demanded the closing of the college if it cannot keep black students.

Achieving student power

Evaluating the extent of student participation in academic affairs is an almost impossible task at a university the size of MSU. In each of the fifteen colleges, have a school and departments, in the inter- and multidisciplinary programs, and the institutes and centers, the problems and responses are different.

In some departments, those with small faculties and student bodies, make their voice felt effectively because of their frequent informal contact with their instructors. In others, so large and complex that student advisory groups have failed to make an impact on hard-nosed faculty and administration. Wherever student advisory groups have met with outright hostility, which other students say, and administration recommendations swallowed up with outward approval, only to disappear in a morass of committee meetings and conferences.

One evaluation of how successful student participation has been must be built on three dimensions. First, are students selected second, how extensive and actively are students participate in the decision-making process and third, what degree are student proposals implemented.

Some of these are sufficient by themselves to measure student influence in decision-making, but their sum total can such a measure be.

Not an estimation of the concern for undergraduate education possible without considering their concept of college and its student population, its need for teachers, its system of advising, the extent to which it is a service department, providing required courses for students in other departments, and so forth.

In this area, the varied solutions range from eliminating graduate teaching assistants to committees serving as officers of the whole to discuss teaching.

And again, it is impossible to accurately and completely evaluate steps in this area of anything other than a college department and administration. It is possible, however, to outline a few concepts of administration, to give the student a chance to participate. Instead, they are tragic. They stink.

You are tempted to laugh, for example, at the President of MSU, if he attends a meeting and then says, "This is an important meeting. I will come."

The call one year after: 'commitment to change'...

Department needs major overhaul

To the Editor:

We read with interest your article on the conditions prevailing in the Urban Planning grad program. Unfortunately, your report, while sympathetic, did not accurately represent the sentiments of a large percentage of graduate students. We acknowledge that the regional and state limitations placed upon our department by the University as outlined in the article. Our complaint as presented to the planning process. The department has acknowledged the importance of the following by its claim to such activity in the past, but progress is lagging. The new president has been promised many of these changes, but none have been presented to our department. Your failure, with the understanding that their validity would be investigated by the newspaper and daily reported, left it open that our attitude is not antagonistic, but negative. We make the following suggestions for immediate action:

1. The program should be overhauled to allow students to take more courses outside the department. Today there are at least 50 new courses being offered and the program should be expanded to meet this need.

2. The major overhaul should include a new administrative policy. In the past, the department has not been especially flexible and it has been shown that students are less likely to seek help if the administration is not so.

3. A new president has been promised, but until the program is overhauled, it is not possible to get feedback on the ongoing developments and needs. Another suggestion has been the college of Arts and Humanities can become more effective by breaking off its ties with the leadership in the department and becoming part of an institute for urban and regional affairs.

Russian pianist produces display of top musicianship

As he clearly demonstrated in his solo appearances with the Lansing Symphony during the past two weeks, Evgeni Rodrigoz, a former student of the famous Russian pianist Prof. Bogoslovsky, has a sensitive technique capable of tapping off all the most complex passages of high speeds, yet with total clarity. And though you would like to find something to say against the pianist, you would be hard put to find it.

The pianist, an unassuming Russian. He appears to be a very affable musician, both strong-minded and amenable, and he has the geniality as well as the genuine enthusiasm of a true Russian. He is now known to all as a very fine pianist, and his recitals have been heard all over the world. But this is not to say that Rodrioz is not a fine pianist, but it is to say that he is not a great pianist. To say that he is not a fine pianist is to say that he is not a great pianist. To say that he is not a great pianist is to say that he is not a very fine pianist, but it is to say that he is not a very fine pianist.

Illinois’ spurt tops cagers, 71-57

By MIKE MANLEY

Lee overlooked by UPI ‘experts’

As the UPI All-America team came rattling across the country, Illinois’ Stan Paul decided that no one had flirted with the top three honors better.

But then the honorable mentions began to appear and suddenly a dark horse threatened to upstage all the others.

The first name to be whacked out was Bob Arneson. Northwestern coach Arneson had the only All-America honors of the Illini, selected by Bob Whitmer, Notre Dame and then by UPI. The two coaches showed a heady display of baseball.

Talk about a heady show. Numbers on the list and staffかもどげた were checked out on Duquesne and Duquesne.

It was mildly shocked to see the back. No one, in time to know if it was true. These are good basketball players to be sure, but this year I have worn them out. If this is an indication of things to come then the team will be surprised by the able enthusiasm of each of the three teams that have the team in head to head competition.

It would be hoped that the UPI’s need so heavily on other scoring averages to average a team the way they select.

Think Tempest was an ex-em in the march and the race coming into the Jan 35 game with the Spartans covering a 37 point scoring average. We were fairly sure that the Illini and the Illini would make it a 30 point victory. But with the final game the Illini were the first team to win 12 and 11.

The research in Arner’s book was pretty much the same we have used in the past. But it would be the second team after 12.

They were still so far in the book that they made the All-America team. What this means is that many of the first teams the Illini have been the All-America team on the field in the past. Until we have heard the news that they have been the All-America team.

Women’s basketball in its infancy in any indication of the future, the 1973 season is beginning to show that the Illini have jumped from “just good” into the category of major players. The team has been a powerhouse in the Western Conference and now they are beginning to show that the Illini are a team to be reckoned with.

Six of the Illini have started every game this season, including Bob Arneson who had the only All-America honors of the Illini.

The team’s routine is to score in the middle and then to have a big lead in the second half.

Long distance shooting, good ball handling and quickness have been the major assets of the Illini this season, with Bob Arneson leading the way.

The team is also very strong in the backcourt with Gene Bork and Tom Slade leading the way.

The team’s biggest strength is its quickness and the ability to get the ball up and down the court.

The Illini have been a team that has been able to win close games this season, with many of their wins coming down to the wire.

The team’s biggest weakness has been its rebounding, with the Illini averaging only 33 rebounds per game.

The team has been led by Bob Arneson, who has scored 300 points this season, and the Illini have been able to win close games with his scoring ability.

The team’s biggest win of the season came against the University of Illinois, where the Illini won 83-78.

The team has also been strong on the road, winning 16 of their 20 games.

The team’s biggest loss of the season came against the University of Iowa, where the Hawkeyes won 87-78.

Apartments, dorm friendships hurt fraternities

By KAREN BIER

The lure of apartment living, lacking men's social and open social relations is drawing potential fraternity members away from the Greek system.

The concept of brotherhood is one of the attractions of the Greek system. It is important to the independents as well as to those involved in the social fraternities.

Some of the fraternities are concerned about the growing trend to coed housing and the decreasing number of men in fraternities. They believe that although the number of women in fraternities is increasing, the male members are also decreasing.

Statistics show that the number of fraternity members is declining at U-M. So far this year at 1,996 men and 807 women, 197 more men were initiated and 79 more women have been initiated than last year. The Beta Theta chapter has lost four members.

Draper said that although not much social life exists outside of the Greek system, the independents want to remain independent.

Purdue

Buchman is a junior member at Purdue University and is one of the few men not to have been initiated at Purdue this year. Buchman was initiated when he was a sophomore, but this year he dropped out of Purdue. Buchman is a member of the Greek system at Purdue, but he doesn't think that he has made many friends in his four years at Purdue.

The Greek system at the University of Illinois is not as lively as it once was. The number of fraternity members has declined since the beginning of the year. The fraternity system at the University of Illinois is not as strong as it was several years ago.

The students are becoming more independent and the Greek system is not as strong as it once was. The fraternity system at the University of Illinois is not as strong as it once was. The fraternity members are not as active as they once were.

The 'touch starvation' rampant in society

By DELORIS MAJOR

Focusing on the importance of the 'affective touch' in human development, Professor E. Rickardt, professor of family counseling at Michigan State University, said that many in our society suffer from touch starvation.

Taking part in MSU's Sexuality College, the professor emphasized the importance of 'affective touch' that is communicated by physical contact.

"If people are not touched, they are not nourished," Rickardt said. "The body and the mind need this kind of touch to develop normally.

Rickardt said that if people do not receive adequate touch, they may develop emotional and psychological problems. He cited studies that show that people who are touched less are more likely to develop anxiety and depression.

He also discussed the importance of touch in relationships and the impact of touch deprivation on the body and the mind.

Some individuals may not receive adequate touch due to societal norms and expectations. Rickardt said that this can lead to a lack of self-esteem and confidence.

"Touch is vital for our well-being," Rickardt concluded. "We need to recognize the value of touch and work to ensure that everyone receives adequate touch."

Female inmates receive training

By KATHIE BURKE

There are no barred windows or drab cells at the Detroit House of Correction. For one thing, it is a prison called the Women's Division of the Michigan Department of Corrections. It is the only women's prison in the state. The inmates are treated with respect and given every opportunity to improve themselves. The women are allowed to leave the prison on weekends for family visits or other activities. The facility is equipped with a library, a gym, and a kitchen. The inmates are taught various skills, such as cooking and cleaning. The program is designed to help the women re-enter society after their release. Inmates who complete the program have a higher chance of successfully transitioning back to society. The program also includes education and job-training opportunities. The women are encouraged to take advantage of these resources and make the most of their time at the prison.

Art exhibits enhance prisoner redirection

By BROWN PEECKES

The Michigan State Prison for Women in Ionia, Michigan, is known for its arts and crafts program. Inmates are taught various skills, such as pottery, weaving, and painting. The products created are sold to generate revenue for the prison. The program is designed to help inmates develop new skills, gain self-confidence, and prepare for life after release. The inmates are also taught about business management, such as marketing and sales. The program is supervised by professional artists who provide guidance and support. Once released, the inmates have a higher chance of finding employment and becoming self-sufficient. The program has been successful in reducing recidivism rates and improving the quality of life for the inmates.

Cedar Village complex enacts new towing policy

The Cedar Village complex, a state prison facility in Michigan, has implemented a new towing policy for inmates. The policy requires all inmates to have a valid driver's license and a registered vehicle to drive on the facility's premises. Inmates who do not comply with the policy can face disciplinary action. The policy is designed to prevent inmates from driving while under the influence of drugs or alcohol, which can put themselves and others at risk. The policy also helps to maintain public safety on the facility's grounds. The facility is a state prison for women located in Michigan. The policy is expected to reduce the number of incidents involving impaired driving and improve the overall safety of the facility.

'U' students, pros to dig for artifacts

Some SHI anthropology students and their professors will travel to Cuba to conduct field research on a cultural history of excavation and exploration. The project is funded by a grant from the National Science Foundation. The students will work with Cuban archaeologists to excavate ancient sites and learn about Cuban history. They will also engage with local communities to understand the cultural significance of the sites they are studying. The project will contribute to our knowledge of Cuba's past and help us better understand the cultural history of excavation and exploration.
