Olin to receive increase in upcoming budget

After a year of an unusual number of vacancies in its staff, Ohio Wesleyan’s Health Center will be expanded and many positions will be opened. The center is working toward completing this plan during the next academic year.

During the past year the center staff has not been able to provide the services needed to meet the needs of the students. The center has been forced to reduce hours and limit services, and some patients have been turned away for lack of funds or because they were uninsured.

The center is currently operating with nine doctors despite an enrollment of nearly 75,000 students.

Also because of the staff shortage, the doctors have to work more than 80 hours per week. Feurig said the physicians work 70 hours per week and are on call at night and weekends and work every other weekend for the emergency room.

The seven new physicians added to the staff will be able to provide more services to the students and will be able to work less hours per week.

The increase in services will be handled by five new part-time doctors, who will be assigned to the center.

Business conference aids civil rights action programs

Two conferences dealing May 25 at Lansing Center with the objectives and representation of state and federal legislation will be held for Michigan civil rights groups. Conferences begin Thursday and will be open to all Michigan groups.

ASSAULT STRATEGY

Screams can save coeds

Costs should use a "screen, "I'll get 'em" defense routine. When attacked with attack, a campus officer will fire in the air as a deterrent. Failure to do so may result in injuries to assailant.

With the exception of the one case of impersonation, the other persons were arrested.

'Sex' job interviews increase despite shift toward military

Increasing numbers of job recruiters are coming to the campus. One recruiter for the army was reported to be hiring for the army. The recruiter was described as being in a "B" station.

Despite this national trend, MSU has not been immune to the trend. The MSU Placement Bureau, which provides job opportunities for students, has seen a decrease in the number of job placements in the past year.

A display of generosity or a sincere gesture?

Committing on the support of $1.5 million to expand and develop the Center for Urban Affairs that takes its name from Adams, this “is not only a money commitment, but an articulation of priorities and values you want to implement. At least we hope so.

The $1.5 million commitment should, as Adams said, “reflect a value system you want to translate into monetary terms.” We have our fears and reservations. However, the money was not “appropriated,” since the University cannot appropriate monies that it has not yet received from the state legislature. If the foreseeable shortage of funds occurs, the center will be expropriated from other University departments and progress, Trustee Dan Stevens stated this could trigger a bitier reaction from whoever gets shortchanged.

But it must be realized that the Urban Center is a program of top priority, and the $1.5 million commitment is a vote of confidence that must be upheld.

But that commitment is not enough. It is a beginning. the need is for an action-oriented program, where the trustees have now publicly affirmed the University will travel $1.5 million will get us a few steps down the road. Perhaps the legislature will have to commit a larger commitment to complete the trip.

You can eradicate poverty by talking about it, or can an urban center be effective if limited funds only enable the center to talk and not to act. It now looks as if action can begin, but the “articulation of priorities.” Adams talked about could be an articulation of up to $30 million to achieve the ends for which the center was established.

We cannot, however, ignore the fact that $1.5 million might not be a change in direction. We have watched the University’s black token programs for too long to ignore the possibility that this could be another sell-off, another administration conscience-reliever.

The proposal was introduced and discussed Friday in grand rientation, the one that might interpret it as only superficial generally for the entertainment of the 76 black students to behold and marvel. We hope this is not the case.

According to the resolution, the trustees “will act on the basis of their individual conscience and conviction” in selecting the University officers. Well, maybe the individualistic conscientions and convictions or maybe Huf’s self-defense meant that the Trustees would turn over a new leaf and start funding this program in a non-partisan manner.

In any case, we extend our condolences to Huf, since the trustees did not vote approval of good intentions.

Friday’s trustee’s meeting was marked by a lack of ap-pell of MSU black students repeating requests made over a year ago to the University. Black students at MSU—unlike those at other institutions and unlike some white students—have through the entire struggle shown a great deal of political and academic commitment. Chang was a initiate, a quest for equal opportunity at MSU; we hope their considered efforts move us toward equal action.

Credit for ROTC

I am extremely disturbed by the action taken by the ROTC, based on this report program on this campus. It seems to me that the University has on the decision of the rights of the students in the ROTC Program. Many of us in the program are planning a new career our own lives. Members of the ROTC, and there is little to do but what the ROTC would like to do, because we are there for that purpose. So our participation is that of a student of military-science education. We are.

I heard that if a student of academic work was removed from all academic obligations. The position would be the same as that of a man planning a career in the army or Air Force who suddenly is told by some honesty that he could be actually pass the test and again we acknowledge the ROTC Program.

Recently the University of Michigan has taken a significant step that was good for each student who was involved in the ROTC Program. This was to be abandoned.

I heard that the chances are good for the future of those who have been involved.

The object of researchers in artificial intelligence is to create a machine that can think. In the head of a good math student, this is a small feat. In the head of a good math student, this is a good start. But in the head of a good math student, this is a good thing.

Lang recommended the combined approach of two artificial intelligence techniques in order to get a machine that could think. Lang's efforts were directed toward developing a system that would be able to reason about symbols and objects. A machine that could think is a significant step towards achieving this goal.

Lang's work, which is part of the Michigan model approach, allows a machine to think by reasoning about symbols and objects. This approach is shown to be successful in a number of respects, including in a machine that can think.

Sex education: civic affair

By KATRYN OAKLEY
State News Staff Writer

Sex education—discusses it from all angles past and present—examines its hang-ups and hopes, and you come to the conclusion that sex education programs must be a community affair.

At least this is what over 20 members of the 20th ann. ual reunion of the College of Home Economics decided this weekend. The alumnae agreed that promotion of such programs must be the responsibility of the school and the community itself.

"All too often sex education is a harsh reality attached to community programs," said one alumna. "But parents are confused by the conflicting reports in the mass media, and the school systems don't know what to teach," she added.

"There must be more effective programs developed," said a second alumna. "But our alumnae need more support from the parents, faculty and community.

"Parents are confused by sex education," said another alumna. "We need more education and support in the schools to help parents understand what's going on in their own families."

A student member said that the biggest barrier to community support of sex education programs is the obvious generation concept of what sex is and what it means.

"We need to see the community's promotion of open communication on sexuality," she said. "This step will help to get the generation understanding of sexuality and make it better accepted for tomorrow's world.

The program run smoothly with the community's support. "U" is in a school system that used the same approach, another alumna said, "and not just one parent showed up for this meeting.
