New constitution drafted by 3 ASMSU members

By ROBERT H. WIEBE

Newspaper Staff Writer

Two major political parties have been working behind the scenes to draft a new ASMSU constitution, and the results of their efforts will be presented to the student body for approval this week.

The Constitution Committee and the Student Senate, which are responsible for drafting the constitution, have both been working on their individual drafts. The Constitution Committee, under the leadership of Senator Jack Sullivan, has drafted a new constitution that emphasizes the role of the Senate in the governance of the university.

On the other hand, the Student Senate has been working on a constitutional amendment that would give the Senate more power in decision-making.

The two groups will present their respective drafts to the student body for approval at a special meeting scheduled for this week.

Grid stars deny gambling ring link

By MICHIGAN STATE UNIVERSITY

The team of students who have been working on the constitutional amendment have been faced with a number of challenges in their efforts to prevent gambling on campus.

One of the biggest challenges has been the resistance of some students to the idea of restricting gambling on campus. Many students believe that gambling is an essential part of college life and should be allowed.

The constitutional amendment, however, proposes to completely ban all forms of gambling on campus. The amendment would also prohibit the sale of lottery tickets and other forms of gambling.

The constitutional amendment has been met with mixed reactions from the student body. Some students support the amendment, while others areagainst it.

One of the main arguments against the amendment is that it would violate the rights of individual students to participate in gambling.

The constitutional amendment will be presented to the student body for approval at a special meeting scheduled for this week.
Legislature prepares for controversial issues

Michigan legislators are heating up the governor's education reform package which they say they will take to a vote by week's end, but which may take up new life this week.

House Speaker William A. Ryan, who has been the key player in the education reform debate, has set a Wednesday deadline for the legislative session. If the bills are not passed by then, there is little doubt that they will return to the floor of the Senate.

Despite the lack of a formal vote, Ryan and lobbying groups are confident that the bills will be passed. Ryan said he would sign the bills into law, and that the Senate will be ready to act on any measures that the House passes.

The bills deal with a variety of issues, including education funding, teacher certification, and curriculum standards. They also include proposals to increase penalties for truancy and drug offenses, and to allow for the use of vouchers to pay for private school tuition.

The bills are expected to be debated in the House on Wednesday, with a floor vote possibly coming as early as Thursday.

The House has already passed similar bills in the past, but this year's version includes a number of new provisions, including a requirement that schools must have a plan for addressing violence and drug use.

Ryan said he expects the bills to be passed by the House, but he acknowledged that there may be some changes made before the Senate votes on them.

The Senate is expected to take up the bills shortly after the House, and Ryan said he hopes to have them passed by the end of the week.

The bills are expected to be debated in the Senate on Thursday, with a floor vote possibly coming as early as Friday.

If the bills are passed, they will then be sent to the governor, who has indicated that he will sign them into law.

The bills are expected to be signed by the governor by the end of the week, and they will then be sent to the governor's office for his signature.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said American intelligence sources could have a ballistic missile in place before 1974, the Russians have a tremendous missile force in place before 1975." -Defense Secretary Melvin Laird

The disclosure emerged around Mr. Gehri's last visit to Washington, during which the intelligence community pressed for an immediate move. The president's national security advisor, former general, said there was "potential for striking a significant impact.

"We know people are now aware of the fact that there's a continuing effort toward the achievement of the target. Given the size of the problem, however, the rate of its progress - the rate of its progress toward that target - is not clear.

Laird also related to how much earlier the second knock-out punch would be ready, what he said gives the information to Congress in hearings on the budget.

Two new weapons

He cited two new offensive weapons which were and would be added to the list of the following.

These included a probe in developing a new missile-carrying submarine, the BL, which would be a future-on in the missile program:

The other would be the Navy's Undersea Long Range System, as expected on the Polish submarine system.

Both of these are in the research and development stage and, considering the time it usually takes to bring a new weapon system into operation, it's not expected to come in the next ten years or so.

EDITORS' NOTE: The following "Point of View" was written by Mrs. Robert E. Brown, Chairman Teen Forum. The article concerns the non-existent threat from student participation in academic government.

Let's get a few things straight and let's get them straight now. The fact is, Mr. President, there is no threat from student participation in academic government. In fact, the title of this article is both honest and true. When you've had enough "student participation" you'll realize it's just an empty threat. That is precisely what this article is about. It will be demonstrated and deepy hidden in the paragraphs ahead. If John Hancock is no longer among us, What ought to be said, because the destruction of the gifted is an amazing thing.

Homosexuals form ‘gay clubs’

The only other school in the Big Ten, besides the University of Michigan, that has a university-sanctioned organization is the University of Illinois. An organization known as the Gay Liberation Front (GLF) has recently been founded on the Illinois campus. The majority of students in the university seem concerned about what the organization may entail, and many are fearful about what the consequences of enrollment may be.

Although the GLF is not yet an organized entity, it has plans to expand to other schools next year. The organization is interested in forming a chapter at a university in Illinois, and it is hoped that this chapter will eventually become the nucleus of a national gay liberation movement.

The organization is currently looking for interested individuals to join its ranks, and it is expected that the number of members will grow rapidly in the coming months.

The GLF is a student-run organization, and it is expected to operate under the guidelines set forth by the university administration.

The GLF is interested in providing a safe and supportive environment for its members, and it is expected that the organization will offer a variety of events and programs to cater to the needs of its members.

The organization is also interested in advocating for the rights of the LGBTQ+ community, and it is expected that the GLF will engage in public awareness campaigns and other activities to raise awareness about the issues facing the LGBTQ+ community.

Overall, the GLF is a student-run organization that is dedicated to providing a supportive environment for its members and advocating for the rights of the LGBTQ+ community. It is expected that the organization will continue to grow and expand in the coming months.

Temple University, a small Philadelphia school, whose main claim to fame is noted basketball star Dolph Schayes, just may have given Gus Ganakas the answer to his problems.

In the battle for last place in the Ivy West Classic last week, the Owls threw a 3-2 zone defense on the double-weave Spartans and dropped MIT to a ridiculously easy 90-1 win. It was the darkest day of the young season of the first-year forces.

The greatest testimony that can be given to the defense is that Schayes, high-scoring Ralph Streeter, who was averaging over 30 points a game, was a rangier 15 points below his average.

Frustrated, Ganakas decided to throw out the three-turnover-to-one-confiscation records to break the lead in the first half with Ten Basketball.

In the second half, both teams went up and down the court, but it was Temple who came out on top with the Owls winning 90-51. The Owls were led by Benjamin Calabria with 13, but it was hardly dropped to 0-2 in

The Owls expanded the lead three times and led the game nine times but fell to 9-2 in the conference.

For a team that is unorthodox with a 2-0 record, the Spartans basketball team at MSU is not without worries. Point and forward, center Bill Kilgore from River Range, known by the nickname "Redhead" has been ruled ineligible for the remainder of the season. This is because his name was submitted to the conference in a form he could not be retained. Kilgore needed his two best rebounders, Simpson and center Rich Gibson, under the basket with the two months and forward Ron Gallagher out front. Randy Benjamin and Joe Logue, both starters, who had been playing well have been suspended for the long road trip. There was some concern in the week whether Ward would play, but he says he'll be in the lineup Saturday night to play in three-night battle with Northwestern's high-scoring forwards.

The best "answer" to the Spartans' zone defense was the same place out of Notre Dame's game, Michigan, 0-2 in the conference and with the Spartans springing a 3-2 zone for the first time, had to do something.

NEW ORLEANS (17 18) — Four days before perhaps the most important game left over, MSU coach Jack Beauchamp said he was not a part of the open beer order in the Michigan quality food.

Dawson's explanation was that he was a non-smoker, so he could not afford to have several beers.

The tail, dark-haired quarterback received a full of rumors, faced the faithful followers of the Spartans and would have him anyway. He would have had Dawson for a talk and a drink before the game.

Dawson did not hide his statements about Dawson's future, his high school football coach, Duff Crider. Dawson said, "I don't know if I have a chance to go to the NFL. Dawson has not been a risk of mine."
