NEWBERRY, Ten. (AP) — Police said Wednesday they are looking for a shooting suspect who killed four people at an old schoolhouse in a town just outside this central Tennessee city.

It was the second day of a shooting rampage that claimed the lives of four people. The shooting began Tuesday night when police responding to a 911 call about a man with a gun found him dead in a schoolhouse.

Officials said the suspect in Tuesday's shooting was still at large Wednesday morning.

In the meantime, the schoolhouse will remain closed to students and faculty.

"It's a very tragic situation," said district Superintendent Dr. Jim Markham. "This is a community that has been through a lot, and this is a hit that's really going to hit us hard."

The schoolhouse was used as a temporary classroom for students who were not able to attend classes because of damage from a recent tornado.

A school official said the shooting was a motive for the attack.

Testimony puts Collins at scene

ANN ARBOR (UPI) - A former roommate of auto mechanic Norman Collins, rugged with the key murder of 18-year-old Karen Re Beineman a year ago, testified Monday that he cut the man's throat at night in the victim's home when the state court room was vacant.

The roommate, Arnold Davis, 21, testified at the beginning of the second week of Collins' trial and following testimony by three other witnesses, the prosecution turned its attention to the three Prentiss, Minn., homes that are the scenes of the Collins slayings.

The defense rested Monday and will wrap up Tuesday, and then the prosecution will continue with the rebuttal phase of its case.

Two of the three pointed out Collins as the man who rode off into the night with Miss Beineman the afternoon of July 23, 1969. Just 26 years old, Carol Brecelius, said she was not entirely convinced she positively identified the man.

Miss Brecelius' naked, battered body was found three days after she was last seen alive. She was the seventh and last young woman slain under similar circumstances in the twin university area of Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti.

The defense claimed Miss Brecelius was mistaken in her identification.

Davis, 21, said he first saw Collins in the driveway at about 4:30 p.m. Sunday, Miss Brecelius disappeared.

Oaths and statements about Collins aside, it still will be a mystery as to what was being driven that day.

Davis said, "It was a car." No one has yet identified the vehicle Miss Brecelius was riding in, and although a large dark sedan that day. At least two had said it was a red small four.

The defense contends there was no such red car on the streets.

Davis said he, Collins and another man watched television that evening.

The automobile started, John recognized him by his face. But he didn't think the man had cut her.

The prosecution contends Miss Beineman was killed in the bathtub of a Ypsilanti home by Collins. But the trial has not yet been able to prove it.

Last Thursday, the prosecution accused Mrs. Beineman of lying to the defense lawyers. Mrs. Beineman is employed by Mr. photo of Dr. McKee.

Mr. McKee was last seen alive June 21, 1969. Collins has been in jail since that time.

Foes of amendment seek free TV time

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said Monday he has requested a number of television stations to present without cost the views of senators who oppose the amendment to end the war in Vietnam. Dole said he is not seeking a military or political action. He said he is not seeking to collect money to buy broadcasting time to broadcast statements of senators, on the war. Dole said, "I've got to get free time, and it is time it went on the latest round in a growing controversy over the broadcast of conflicting political views." "Our Democratic Leader, Mr. Johnson, is fighting against what I believe is a net transfer of Federal television time to those who are opposed to the war," Dole said. "We've had included in a partial list of stations making the end-the-war effort an even more well known issue." "I've got to get free time, and I've got to use it.""Del Monte "Safari" Sale

Armed forces justice: a denial of civil rights

There are many reasons why an increasing number of young Americans are repelled by military service. The recent case of Army Capt. Jeffrey MacDonald is one such reason.

Capt. MacDonald is currently under investigation in the murder of his wife and two children — claims the atrocities were committed by a band of drug- crazed hippies. For some time the Army has been seeking unsuccessfully to obtain a sample from MacDonald to compare with evidence found at the scene of the crime. On the advice of his lawyers — and in the absence of a court — MacDonald has elected to decline to supply the sample.

This past week in a Gestapo - like move the Army decided to take matters into its own hands. A jeepload of MPs forced a car that contained MacDonald to go to the ground and the other up to the water and MacDonald away. When the captain was returned to his barracks later in the day, he was minus one hair sample.

In civilian life such a scenario would probably never have taken place — evidence obtained in such a manner is considered questionable. In the Army, however, the very fact that MacDonald is involved in such a gangster move as forcing the car off the road is doubt on the validity of the entire proceedings.

This is not the first time that such a thing has happened. American military justice long has been a laughing topic in the pages of all precepts of the press. The Army leadership is till in a continuing chronic of injustice.

A court is supposed to be a citadel of law and order. He must be the friend and protector of all his civil and human rights when he goes to serve in the Army. MacDonald was especially grave when one considers that most soldiers were forced to enter service involuntarily.

It is an interesting commentary to note that in 1976 the Army commissioned 8,000 1st lieutenants in a continuing chronic of civil rights and due process is called "the draft." A hundred years ago we would have called the same thing "slavery."

One summer's Central Natural Area, a 35-acre forest preserve located on the east side of the Red Cedar River between Hope and Lansing, Michigan, was destroyed by protective measures.

The area has a century-old natural habitat that served as a breeding ground for many species of plants and animals. It is a wetland ecosystem that supports diverse flora and fauna.

Several rare plants and animals have been found here, including the rare Michigan spotted turtle and the endangered Michigan mink.

With the destruction of the area, many species will be at risk of extinction. It is crucial that we take steps to protect and conserve these natural areas.

The destruction of this area is a reminder of the importance of preserving our natural heritage. We must work together to ensure that these areas are protected for future generations.

We need to prioritize conservation efforts and allocate resources to protect these areas. Only then can we ensure the survival of these rare species and the health of our environment.

Let's mobilize and act now to save our natural treasures. It's time to take action and protect our planet.

Nothing new in grid talk

Some sports notes and snorts concerning MSU players, coaches and other pertinent items have made the news recently so I thought I’d take one more shot at the bat before the regular season opens.

MSU’s two most knowledgeable sportswriters, Fred Bissinger of West Virginia, and Jim Sorg of The Orlando Sentinel, are among the Big Ten Big Two sports personal who survived the long and grueling football season and are back in action for the 1987 season.

Monday all the Big Ten Big Two sports personal met in The Orlando Sentinel’s conference room to review the conference’s achievements of last year. Today, Wednesday and Thursday will be open in workshops for the week.

Friday will be the annual banquet with the Football Writers of America who is in attendance. Fred Bissinger, the chairman, the courageous dedicated backbone from Texas, who had to be admitted prior to the Cotton Bowl, will be the guest speaker. The week’s activities will then be concluded with the sports PR luncheon featuring Michigan head coach Bo Schembechler that gets under way as guest of the Chicago Tribune.

Things are likely to slow over at MSU. The MSU office will be closed by having a tailgate party in the stadium parking lot. The halfback of one of the busiest seasons of recent years, the former MSU head basketball coach, Bob Knight, Wallace. The former quarteer who’s been Michigan’s right hand man and personal assistant for the last two years, will also be given the week off. This is a two-person conversation, one between him and Fred Bissinger because of some scheduling problems the week before. The week’s activities will then be concluded with the sports PR luncheon featuring Michigan head coach Bo Schembechler that gets under way as guest of the Chicago Tribune.
