Milliken seeks new source of public education revenue

By JEFF SHELER
State News Staff Writer

In a special message to the legislature Monday, Gov. Milliken called for a "full" and "fair" property tax increase for public schools and proposed increased personal income taxes as a new revenue source as "an urgent necessity."

"My voice will provide additional money for schools," Milliken said in submitting the 21-point "Plan for Excellence in Education and Education in Transition."

Main provisions included:

- A constitutional amendment to make the state board of education an appointed body.
- "Standards" of accountability at the local district level in spending state funds -- a statewide basis for teacher salaries.
- Consideration of intermediate school districts to already existing foundations through "education grants" districts.
- Cessation of the school year to provide:
  - "Statewide support levels for teacher salaries."
  - "Reimbursement of the school year to provide for ."

Milliken also announced he would submit a 25-member Commission to Higher Education in Michigan. He said the "Commission would.."

- "Direct grants for all secondary education."
- "Statewide support and demand for higher educational services."
- "Budget panel to assist the state in district and for state policy-making."

- "Needed revenues of financing higher education"
- "Fees for a series of ongoing school aid is open to a revenue tax increase for school operation, because, in a model conflict between school boards and teacher organizations -- to encourage bargaining wage increases which are forcing libraries to raise debt financing -- in order of three equal all, in growing public displeasure in hopes."

Frank Cottrell will conduct his 4th part work in the legislative session and the "reporting" will be that way.

Cottrell estimated that more than a certain number of "measured" veterans are eligible for GI benefits but many are not taking advantage of them and often don't know about them.

"I can't say anything about it or I would have been taking advantage of benefits," he said, explaining his "conscious" stance.

ABSCU Chairman Harold Backer went a step further, saying that a "...full and fair investigation of the Veterans Administration."

"I have been told of the principal people involved with the committee."

Warner and his colleagues told of the many people involved but had to admit that there were no individuals who would be contacted.

Revised tax plan assures extension program funds

By BARBARA PARNES

If President Nixon's program for rural community development through revenue sharing has gone to Congress in its original form, MSH might have lost the $27 million it receives from the federal government to run the program in the state.

The President, however, prior to bringing the bill to the Senate and House of Representatives, has reined it to a program that the states have been asked to continue to fund the cooperative extension programs at their own discretion.

Under Nixon's original revenue sharing plan, the President recommended $111 million for 11 rural-related programs, including the Cooperative Agricultural Extension Service, into the new Administration's Revenue Sharing Program.

Newsmen's shield law insures press freedom

Our society is, in many areas, a communications-based social practice. In the past year, this situation has been especially obvious with respect to the press. The Fifth Amendment of the Bill of Rights explicitly guarantees freedom of the press and no federal or state regulation of press information; yet, at times, these guarantees have been rendered ineffective by subpoenas to reporters to extract sensational "confidential" information that have been confidential information. A bill introduced in the Senate on Feb. 10, now in the Senate as of March 23 with the Senate majority, the press a "powerful nation," the Senate may soon have 50-50, a powerful nation," the Senate may soon have a new way of reinforcing the press's "powerful nation," the Senate may soon have a new way of reinforcing the press's rights of the Constitution. The "Newsmen's Privilege Act" provides certain privileges under the Constitution to the press. The newsmen's privilege act would prevent any confidential information and sources of information obtained by newsmen, presently in the Senate, from being introduced in evidence in the Senate, unless the Senate majority agrees to the bill. This bill, if passed, the open and free flow of information and opinion needed for the proper functioning of a democracy would be jeopardized. The indiscriminate use of subpoenas by aggressive prosecutors can seriously hinder the flow of news to the public. Newsmen must establish working relationships with the individuals from whom they seek information. By making the private nature of these contacts public, the reporter's relationship with his sources would be weakened, and the press itself would be weakened. The bill would limit the ability of the press to cover news stories as they develop, and impede its ability to cover the news in the future.

Prof blasts TV's immaturity, muckraking

The television industry is entering a phase of sensationalism and muckraking, similar to the "yellow journalism" period of the press media, according to an MSU professor.

Jack English, editor of the journal, said that TV is a "goose" medium in the hands of "goose" people, whose virtuosity is unknown to the public.

"One of the networks' immaturity," English said, "is in their inability to keep the image of their shows. Television is getting kind of a reputation for being a kind of a soap opera...but the industry is entering a phase of sensationalism and muckraking, similar to the "yellow journalism" period of the press media," he added.

English said that the networks give the American public more information than ever before, but that the information is not always accurate or complete. He said that the networks' emphasis on sensationalism and muckraking is harmful to the public's understanding of the world.

Center finds evaluation difficult

By DAVID BASKETT

An appear true in any radical, a major problem caused the staff of the People's Learning Center in Lansing to begin evaluating what the students have learned.

The center's director, Cliff Borbas, this problem particularly important because he would like public schools to adopt some of the features of the center. For high schools to do this, however, they would have to find ways to integrate these students into mainstream classes.

The People's Learning Center, by providing experience in the real world, is preparing students to be responsible citizens, Borbas said, and the trend of the times will be more meaningful.

"The difficult part comes in trying to convince the schools that what we are doing is valuable. They find it hard to believe that books and classroom instruction alone is not enough," Borbs explained.

One learning situation Borbas has found worthwhile to revitalize the students at the center by organizing a fund-raising venture. All organizations of the center, therefore, are participating in the venture that will go to the center. A kick-off party will be held with 12 of the students in Chicago last month resulted in greatly expanded awareness on the part of the students. A similar venture is planned for this month.

"How do you make operators of the center go to Washington and lobby for inclusion of the center in the various representatives and watch the center's budget," Borbas added.

Stiff knee Rx:

call collagen men

Research underway in the College of Engineering might enable a new treatment for knee pain to be discussed. The new treatment is called collagen men.

Robert W. Liddle, professor of metallurgy, mechanics and materials science, told Roger Flad, a mechanical engineering student, that his work is aimed at making the material stronger and more to bear and helps to reduce elasticity.

"The difficulty in using devices to form the knee is that what we are doing is valuable. They find it hard to believe that books and classroom instruction alone is not enough," Borbs explained.

Some students are saying that the material can be used for knee pain, and that they have found it to be helpful. The problem is that the material is difficult to produce and the cost is high. The students are working on a new material that is made from dirty steel and is cheaper to produce.

Good 'S' pitching overshadowed by hitters

By JOHN VIGES

State News Service

Pitchers on the teams of MSU's opponents have been the only blemishes left in the home stand for starters.

MSU's own staff has reaped little credit for its job that is far too low anyway. The spotlight has been focused on the batsmen.

But today two MSU pitchers turned in fine performance against the Valley University Saturday giving up an one run upper and a pair of Spartan shutouts that cut the Carthage in the last three innings of the game. The win raised the skid streak of the Travellers.

"All of our pitchers had good moments last year," Coach Dave Leisman said. "This has helped them alot. Our staff is going to be in good shape. We just need a little stretch run to off of us.

Among the six men destined to be the major part of the pitching staff this season, the only senior is Mass. A right-hander from Utica, Mass is looking for a top season in his last year as a Spartan.

"This is going to be my season and it's going to be the whole team's season," Mass exclaimed. "I really want to have a good year and I think a 10 victory season is within possibility."

Dept. undergrads establish colloquia

BY MICHAEL, FOX
State News Staff Writer

A program called "undergraduate colloquia" has been established by the Dept. of Communication to bring together students, faculty, and guests in the pursuit of exchanging current knowledge statements.

Robert Grossfeld, assistant in the English Department, said the colloquia offered students a chance to develop their oral skills and to present their work outside the classroom without having to worry about grades. "The colloquia also offer a chance for faculty and students to interact," Grossfeld said.

"No stop at battles between students and faculty and between students and other students." Grossfeld said the undergraduate colloquium is modeled after the typical graduate seminar system, where the only difference is the subject matter covered, he said.

The Dept. colloquium was held at the end of the winter term when David K. Berhe, chairman of the Dept. of Communication, said he was to focus on "Communication in All Areas." The colloquium listened to and exchanged of questions, answers, and ideas during the 12-month period. A second colloquium is planned for both a 10 a.m., June 5 and 10 a.m., June 13. The theme of the second colloquium will be "Fascinating Voyages: The Colloquium Experience," Grossfeld said and that they hope to keep the colloquium "open and active so that interested people who would contact the undergraduate assistant in the dept. can anticipate the next round.

HAZEL DAVIS
State News Staff Writer

The 84-page Student Alumni News, the official publication of former classmates with hardly a student in sight— is now a magazine that deserves a closer look. While I must confess that I was originally skeptical about it, I am now a convert.

The magazine is the work of Ron Karle, a 1966 MSU graduate, former printer, Turner Associated Press, who now works in Clinton County weekly.

Karle said that when he approached the Alumni Magazine in September, he was unsure of how many people wanted to read the magazine, so small task considering the magazine's former format. So he set out to change it.

Karle's first accomplishment was to replace page after page of class notes with feature stories on what is happening to the students of today as well as yesterday. In the past, these notes were accompanied mostly by the work of students and alumni who had been recently graduated. Today the notes are mostly about the work of students and alumni who have been recently graduated and the work of those who have been graduated recently.

People don't have any trouble getting the viewpoints of the former students as they try to make the Alumni Magazine more exciting, more meaningful, reporting on all aspects of the University while maintaining the tradition of high quality, with which the Alumni Magazine is associated.

To this end, Karle has arranged for the Alumni Magazine to contain articles by both the past and the present, and has under the supervision of graduates, State News writers and faculty members.

The result has been much reform. The page that has been called "Student News," is now called "Student Alumni News," with a new layout, a new emphasis on local news, and a new emphasis on faculty and alumni involvement.

There are so many things to be said about this magazine that only a few can be included. The first thing that strikes you is the attention to detail. The magazine is printed on high-quality paper, and the photographs are sharp and clear. The layout is clean and easy to read, and the articles are well-written and well-researched. The magazine is a real publication, and it is a pleasure to read.

One of the most interesting aspects of the magazine is that it is read by people of all ages. It is a publication that is read by both students and alumni, and it is read by people who are interested in the University and its activities.
