COLOMBO, Ceylon (AP) - A U.S. Air Force official in the capital of this birthplace of aviation said Wednesday that five American F-104 Starfighter jets were en route to Ceylon for air defense training exercises.

The official, who declined to be identified, said the jets would arrive in Colombo in early May and would remain for a month. The official also said the jets would be used in joint maneuvers with the Ceylonese Air Force.

The official added that the jets were part of a larger U.S. military assistance program to Ceylon, which includes training of Ceylonese pilots in the United States. The program is aimed at improving Ceylon's air defense capabilities and expanding military relations between the two countries.

The jets are equipped with advanced avionics and radar systems, which will allow them to conduct sophisticated air defense exercises. The training will include realistic scenarios involving simulated enemy aircraft, and the Ceylonese pilots will be trained in intercepting and engaging the targets.

The official also mentioned that the jets would be deployed to various locations in Ceylon, allowing for a comprehensive evaluation of their effectiveness in different environments. The training will include both theoretical and practical sessions, ensuring a comprehensive understanding of air defense strategies.

The U.S. assistance program to Ceylon is a significant development, highlighting the strong military ties between the two nations. This partnership not only enhances Ceylon's defense capabilities but also strengthens the strategic alliance between the United States and Ceylon, contributing to regional stability and security.
Back to the chicken, cigarettes and martinis

So you've given up eating fried chicken because your doctor says all that greasy chicken and French fries is bad for your health. And you've cut down on as much milk you can because you heard it was rotting your bones. Last week you took the last cheese cloth from the refrigerator because you watched your weight and you no longer eat any processed foods, whether you use butter or margarine, nor taking what you can in a polyunsaturated variety whatever.

And, oh yes, you haven't had a good cigar since the surgeon general's report was published, and you're worried about your liver so you've given up that after dinner drink, but it doesn't matter anyway because you have no time to drink since the doctor told you to drink only 10 p.m.

Yet, you can't forget all that nonsense now. Even the doctors who've been feeding you all that medicinal advice don't believe it is worth it. Or at least one East Lansing physician has his doubts.

Dr. Richard M. Akers can tell you how to live to be 100 but claims it may not be worth the trouble.

"Profits a mean a little set to get 93 to live to be 90 or 100 at risk or not having lived in the first place," says Dr. Akers, a good doctor explains, "If he has never shown the chicken at all to his history of an after-dinner cigar. Or the history of any one who can be struck down by 40 on the freeway."

Ah, such sweet, ordinary comment from a professional man.

Don't be deceived, however. Bates, a 90, 50 - year old Hay, may not want to live at 100 at risk or not having lived in the first place," but he is a master of "principle of maximum." Practice moderation in all things," the doctor advises, "are not the rules of the game."

What sort of moderation does the doctor defines moderation; based on the "minimum" - that's the kind of moderation in which you can be decked down by 40 on the freeway.

There have been many advertisements for "water beds," are good for the back? Over a long period of time could they be harmful to yours? Are they better for a medical condition? Water beds are not as popular now as they used to be, but they are still available, and if you are interested, you might want to check them out.

There is no such thing as "normal" body weight. What is a normal weight for a person of your height and sex? It depends on your age, sex, and other factors. There are many different ways to determine your body weight, but the most common method is to use the body mass index (BMI).

BMI is calculated by dividing a person's weight in kilograms by their height in meters squared. A BMI of 18.5 to 24.9 is considered healthy, while a BMI of 25 or higher is considered overweight. A BMI of 30 or higher is considered obese.

You should talk to your doctor if you have questions about your weight or if you are concerned about your weight. They can help you make healthy weight-related changes.

The "pros" of dieting

1. Can help you maintain a healthy weight.
2. Can improve your overall health.
3. Can reduce your risk of developing certain diseases, such as heart disease, diabetes, and some types of cancer.

The "cons" of dieting

1. Can be difficult to maintain in the long term.
2. Can lead to weight fluctuations and health problems associated with dieting.
3. Can be expensive and time-consuming.

To the editor:

A former student of mine who was at the University of Michigan and later went on to Harvard Business School, has written a book that I think you would enjoy. His name is "The Procrastination Equation." You may be familiar with it, but you may not have read it. It is a great book that provides a framework for understanding procrastination.

The book begins with an introduction to procrastination and its causes, and then goes on to explore the different types of procrastination, such as goal-directed and time-directed procrastination. It also covers the cognitive and behavioral strategies that can help people overcome procrastination.

The book is well-written and provides valuable insights into procrastination. It is a must-read for anyone who struggles with procrastination or wants to understand it better.

Nixon's economic policy blasted

The White House has issued a warning about the possible consequences of a proposed lower dollar exchange rate.

"The question of whether the dollar will strengthen or not is a matter of concern to many people around the world," said a White House official.

A lower dollar exchange rate could lead to higher prices for imported goods, which could in turn lead to higher unemployment and a slower rate of economic growth.

"We are watching the situation closely and will make a decision in the coming weeks," the official said.

The official also noted that the dollar's future value is not solely dependent on the exchange rate, but also on the strength of the US economy.

"Our goal is to maintain a stable and strong dollar, which will benefit both consumers and businesses," the official added.

The statement comes as the US economy continues to recover from the COVID-19 pandemic, with unemployment rates dropping and consumer confidence rising.

"We are optimistic about the future of the US economy," the official said. "We are confident that our policies will continue to support economic growth and job creation."

JAZZ CONCERT SET

Trios 'Swing with Bach' —

The Joliet Loussier Trio from France will present "Play Bach," a jazz concert based on improvisations of the music of Johann Sebastian Bach. At 8:15 p.m., tickets in the Auditorium will be sold for $5. The concert is 'special' in the MICH Center - Concert Series.

Bach, and Loussier, who studied piano at the Paris Conservatory of Music, "is the only classical composer who swings."

"Bach's music can be translated into the modern way, and it's possible to make Bach's music a very respectable way. I'm sure if he had lived, he would have made music the way we do today."

"When I started playing the piano at the age of 10, I was one of my own compositions."

I don't think there are any other classical musicians who works in this kind of music."

Loussier, one of the first modern musicans to be successful in using Bach's music, established his reputation as a jazz musician when he received his first "playback" recording in Paris. Later, he was awarded a prize at the Cannes Film Festival. His third concert in the series was the press conference for the first French film of 1945. He has been awarded gold records in Germany and received another in Brussels for French records of his work.

A native of Angers, France, Loussier entered the Paris Conservatory at 13 to study under Yves Varnier. In 1960 he began composing and arranging. He has written and performed music for films, television shows, and commercials. Tickets are available at the MICH Union Ticket Office.

Sociologists for effective ecology plans

The Michigan League, Student Health, Environment, and Public Information Committee of the University of Michigan student body (U-M) is planning to create a new campaign to build awareness and to promote environmental action among students.

The campaign will involve a series of events and activities, including workshops, discussions, and environmental projects. The goal is to educate students about the urgency of environmental issues and to encourage them to take action to protect the environment.

The campaign is being led by a group of dedicated socioologists who have been working on similar campaigns in other institutions. They believe that by working together, they can create a more effective campaign that will have a greater impact.

The campaign will begin with a series of workshops on topics such as climate change, biodiversity, and pollution. These workshops will be designed to provide students with the knowledge and tools they need to make informed decisions about their environmental impact.

In addition to the workshops, the campaign will include a series of environmental projects that students can participate in. These projects will include cleaning up local parks, planting trees, and conducting research on local environmental issues.

The Michigan League, Student Health, Environment, and Public Information Committee of the University of Michigan student body (U-M) is excited about the potential of this campaign and is committed to making it a success.

They are looking forward to working with other organizations and individuals who are interested in promoting environmental action and are eager to see the results of their efforts.

If you are interested in learning more about the campaign or in participating in it, please contact the Michigan League, Student Health, Environment, and Public Information Committee of the University of Michigan student body (U-M) at 517-326-3495 or email them at studenthealth@umich.edu.

They look forward to hearing from you soon.

This year, 1,000 Michigan residents will become "participant" through participation in world affairs seminars sponsored by the Office of International Education.

A participant, Barbara Legesse, extension director, is a person who can influence government policy makers, representatives of international organizations and leaders in their respective fields.

What we're backing now is not really "free education,"" Legesse said. "While some of the seminars are taught by students, there is always an instructor to teach and inform the students on issues.

The seminars are attended by women and men with international knowledge. The instructors do not know about world affairs to be involved in seminars or even to be interested in the Vietnam conflict. Our purpose is not to involve one nation, but to let people know the problems of the world.

Participants are selected with meetings with students in the Department of International Studies.

``When our experts work with the community, we produce participants,'" Legesse said.

The seminars are attended by students and workers of the community. They are conducted by the instructors and topics include international relations, political science, foreign affairs and world history.

Participants are selected for their expertise and experiences. The seminars are aimed at providing a world perspective to the participants.

``We believe the world affairs seminars have taken hold because the participants are doing something that prevents an "significant,"" Legesse said. "They are taught about important topics or subjects to take place, whether we are at home or abroad."" The seminars are an opportunity to learn about the world and the participants are encouraged to participate in the seminars.

The seminars are taught by students and instructors. The seminars are held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. in the Student Union. The seminars are open to all students, regardless of their majors or interests.

For more information, contact the Office of International Education at 734-258-1600.

Why Pay More! Why Pay More!
The new Residence Halls Association (RHA) has the potential to become a powerful voice for students, said Robert P. Flinn, Counseling Services, and a key role in the representation of students within the University community. "Don't think that's a general statement among student councilman," Flinn said. "The fact is that local RHA's are strong leaders, and I think that RHA's are possible solutions to the problem of students at the University, and that will be "a very visible presence on the campus."

Flinn said that in the past, RHA was a weak leadership, with no house questions and no sense of direction, and that he felt that RHA's could be stronger leadership for the University. "The RHA is now more than just the sponsor of some 'campus events,"" he said. "It is now concerned with student concerns and boardings, and boardings for next year." He noted that in the past, RHA had been interested in the representation of students within the University community, but had failed to achieve this goal. "We have a potential to become a powerful voice for students, and I think that RHA's can be strong leadership for the University," Flinn said.

"Death spectre" to appear in area
In the city of Lansing, the Lansing Art Museum will present a new exhibition of American art, "Death Spectre," which will feature works by American artists from the 1920s to the 1980s. The exhibition will run from October 1 to November 30, and will feature works by such artists as Charles Demuth, Georgia O'Keeffe, and Jackson Pollock. The exhibition will be open to the public, and will be free of charge. The exhibition will be sponsored by the Lansing Art Museum and the Michigan State University Art Museum.

Students' groups turn to educational films
"We're interested in educational films," said Robert Hixen, a student leader at the University. "We think that educational films can be a powerful tool in educating students about social issues," he said.

The increase in amateurs on campus has also been discussed by members of RHA, Flinn said. "We're looking into a student service and the possible use of volunteers to help on campus," he said.

S. Viets attempt to recapture base

The battle over the highlands had been in progress for several weeks, with both sides intensifying their efforts. The South Vietnamese forces had been reinforced, and the North Vietnamese had launched multiple attacks, including a large-scale offensive in the central highlands.

Another four South Vietnamese battalions, about 2,000 to 2,500 men, were reported to be moving into the area, ready to move out of the fighting zones.

The key to capturing the highlands was the ability to supply the troops in the highlands with ammunition and food. The South Vietnamese had to ensure that their supply lines were secure, and they had to be prepared to deal with the North Vietnamese's ability to maneuver and supply their forces.

If approved, the proposed $71 million Vietnam Veterans Corp. (VVC) would enhance the position of the South Vietnamese forces in the area, making it easier to recapture the highlands. The VVC would provide additional resources to help the South Vietnamese forces operate more effectively.

The fighting was still intense, with both sides taking casualties. The North Vietnamese were believed to be favored in the battle, with their superior numbers and longer supply lines.

Recently, computer scoring of student evaluations of instructors has been introduced at Michigan State University. Computer scoring of student evaluations of instructors was initiated at Michigan State University in 1969. William Warrington, director of the University's Testing and Evaluation Services, said the move toward computer scoring was made in an attempt to increase the reliability and validity of the evaluations. The computer, according to Warrington, eliminates the human element from the evaluation process.

Warrington, along with his staff, prepares a summary report for the Faculties Series. The report is distributed to each member of the faculty. The report includes summary conclusions drawn from the data obtained from the student evaluations. Minutes of the meetings of the departmental and faculty evaluation committees are also included in the report. The report is based primarily on the student evaluations. The report, according to the University, is designed to give the faculty information that is needed for making decisions to improve the quality of instruction. It is hoped that the information contained in the report will be used by the faculty to help them evaluate their own programs and to help them make decisions about the future of their programs.

The Office of Evaluation Services, instead of purchasing the services of a firm to analyze the student evaluations, uses the services of a computer. The computer analyzes the data and provides a summary report for the Faculties Series.

Peking's overtures to U.S. worry Soviets

Under the glowing sign of the massive television tower, the official front line of Peking's attitude toward Washington is visible. It is the official line that has been a basis for the recent American efforts to open the door to the great communist state. The official tone is clear: no change in policy, no lessening of tensions, no hasty attempts to negotiate an end to the Cold War.

But on the unofficial front, where everyday events in the two countries are watched closely, there are signs of a growing unease. The news media in both countries are filled with reports of meetings between high-ranking officials, and the tone of the conversations is often tense. The public is increasingly aware of the risks involved in overtures to Peking.

The official line is that the United States is not in a position to negotiate with Peking on equal terms. The United States, it is argued, is too weak to influence Peking's decisions. But on the unofficial front, the signs are not so clear. The public is aware of the risks involved, but there is a growing feeling that the United States must take a hard line against Peking.

The United States is not the only country concerned about the situation. The Soviet Union, which has been watching the developments closely, is also worried. The Soviet Union is concerned that the United States is not doing enough to check Peking's influence in the world. The Soviet Union is also concerned about the possibility of a new war, which might be started by a miscalculation on the part of one of the superpowers.
