Refugees pour into India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Refugees from East Pakistan were streaming across the border into India on Tuesday, crossing the border from advancing Pakistani troops and setting up camps in the eastern province.

Religious unrest and at least 500 persons have crossed daily from Monday into the area. Those who crossed were mainly Hindus and Sikhs from East Pakistan.

The Pakistani newspaper, Dawn, reported that overcrowding was spreading in the camps set up by the refugees. It said the camps were overcrowded, and that the government was facing a serious problem of providing food and medical relief to the refugees.

The Pakistani army is also planning to build an alternative line of communication with the capital, Khartoum, in case of any future problems.

Radio Pakistan reported that a column of Pakistani troops had moved into the province, and that the government was alerting the people to the situation. It also said that a new National Assembly would be established in East Pakistan.

In Karachi, Pakistan, the government said the refugee situation was not as bad as expected.

'U' submits drug program to HEW

MCLEAN, Va. (AP) — The University of Virginia has submitted a proposal to the U.S. Office of Education for a $6 million project to develop a drug abuse education program in four Southern states.

The proposal, which is the first of its kind in the country, was submitted by the University of Virginia and the University of Maryland. Both institutions have received federal funds for drug abuse education programs.

The preliminary proposal submitted to Washington, D.C., by the University of Virginia and the University of Maryland, involved a $10,000,000 grant to the two universities.

The preliminary proposal involved training for teachers in drug abuse prevention, as well as a curriculum for students in grades 7-10.

The University of Virginia, which has an active drug abuse education program, said it was encouraged by the preliminary report.

Profi ratings require broader distribution

Evolution Services begins sending SIRS form results for each instructor to his department office and to AMSU where the ratings can be open for public examination. Sequencing student evaluations of instructors submits the purpose of the SIRS form ratings. SIRS form ratings are given when the students never get to see their own evaluations.

You bought it

Today is Support the Pentagon Day, another of the causes that can be subscribed to in ignorance of ratings of an instructor’s performance. In fact, since only the instructor receives the SIRS printed, the form provides him with a rather literal pragmatic value. A professor can be conscientiously inferior with ratings of no fear of repercussions, for nobody is aware of the only person in the University who knows of it.

Unions rates can be made public, the SIRS form should be discontinued. Except in the largest lecture sections, a professor cannot help but know which students are concerned about his teaching.

The SIRS questionnaire in its present form seems to us useless. We recommend the Office of Evaluation Services begin sending SIRS form results for each instructor to his department office and to AMSU where the ratings can be open for public examination. Sequencing student evaluations of instructors submits the purpose of the SIRS form ratings. SIRS form ratings are given when the students never get to see their own evaluations.

The best tip is to get it right. It’s not a matter of perfection, but of getting it close enough to be useful.

To the Editor:

Nixon's role seems quite apparent from recent events. Upon his assumption of office, he has taken the first steps of the Nixon Doctrine, which states that the primary responsibility of the United States lies in its own defense.

The Nixon Doctrine includes a greater reliance on the alliances of the past rather than on the intervention of the future. It also includes a smaller commitment of American resources in the Middle East, where the United States has traditionally been a major player.

Furthermore, Nixon has taken steps to reduce the federal deficit, which was running at record levels under President Johnson.

Finally, Nixon has shown a willingness to compromise with his political opponents, which has helped to ease the tension in the country.

In summary, Nixon's role in the event of this crisis is to be a figurehead of the nation, to take the blame where necessary, and to try to maintain the peace and prosperity that his predecessors have worked so hard to achieve.

Pogrom in Vietnam

Their discussion was limited to a group of four people, including Der Spiro's assistant. As he explained his reasons, Der Spiro noted that this was the only way to a solution. The group was divided into two teams, with Der Spiro leading one of them. The discussion lasted for three hours, and during this time, we were allowed to observe and take notes. The atmosphere was formal, and everyone was dressed in business attire. We were given a copy of a legal document, which we studied. The team led by Der Spiro made agreements with other teams, and we were informed that these agreements would be put into practice. The project was considered a success, and we were invited to participate in future discussions. We were also given a schedule for future meetings. Overall, the experience was informative, and we gained a deeper understanding of the importance of teamwork and collaboration. We were grateful for the opportunity to be a part of this important project, and we look forward to working with these talented individuals in the future.
Law aids med schools' anatomic training

Expounded medical programs at MSU have brought about an increased need for human medical cadavers, according to a May 13 report of the Michigan State University Senate.

The Senate reported that the Medical School had received 300 bodies but was still in need of 450. The report also noted that the Senate had been informed that Michigan State's Medical School was one of the few schools in the state that did not receive cadavers from the University of Michigan.

The report recommended that the Senate request a meeting with the University of Michigan to discuss the issue.

Law practice training: Kelley

By LESLIE LEE

The future practice of law lies in the public sector rather than the private sector, says John S. Kelley, professor of law at Michigan State University.

Kelley pointed out that there are many opportunities for public service in the legal profession, including positions as public defenders, appointed judges, and legislative assistants.

Kelley also emphasized the importance of public service for lawyers as a way of giving back to the community and making a positive impact on society.

Kelley said that the legal profession has a significant responsibility to ensure that the public is well represented and protected.

The goal of public service lawyers is to ensure that justice is served for all individuals, regardless of their socioeconomic status or background.

Kelley concluded his remarks by encouraging law students to consider public service as a fulfilling and rewarding career path.

Speakers debate reform of Michigan abortion law

"People who support this idea are trying to defend the interest of those who are born," said Bob Latimer, a member of the National Right to Life Committee. "We are not going to say that abortion is a right, but we are going to say that unborn human life has the same dignity as you and I have."

The Michigan Right to Life Committee has been working for the past year to pass an abortion bill similar to the one in Georgia. They are hoping to have it on the ballot this November.

Governor Miller has expressed his support for the bill and has signed a similar bill into law in California. He has also said that he would sign a similar bill in Michigan.

The Michigan Right to Life Committee is planning to hold a rally in Lansing to support their cause. They are hoping to have a large turnout to show their support for the bill.

Chinese-American relations leap forward

News Analysis

Peking (AP) — Beijing and Washington are reaching a breakthrough in their prickly relations via one of the most unusual routes imaginable: prayer.

While conducting a round of visits to Southeast Asian capitals, President Richard Nixon arrived in Peking on Wednesday with a message of goodwill from the American people. Nixon is believed to be the first American president to visit China. The visit is seen as a major step toward improved relations between the two countries.

The visit is not the first time the United States and China have engaged in diplomatic dialogue, but it is the first time the two nations have opened up direct diplomatic contacts. The announcement of the visit has been met with widespread interest and support, both in the United States and China.

The visit is expected to be a significant milestone in the ongoing efforts to improve relations between the United States and China, which have been strained for decades due to historical conflicts and ideological differences.

MSU team plans police libraries

A three-man team of NIC criminal justice experts is laying the groundwork for a proposed police library in Michigan.

William G. Lourie, director of the School of Criminal Justice at Wayne State University, has been working with Michigan police agencies to create a police library program.

The three-man team consists of Lourie, an expert in police management and criminal justice, and two other experts in the field.

The team has been working with police agencies to identify their needs and to develop a program that meets those needs.

The team is expected to publish a report on its findings in the near future.
