

Chinese delegates work to understand UN, U.S.

By ROBERT BAO
State News Staff Writer
second in a series

In the smoke-filled north lounge of the UN, overlooking the East River waterfront, delegates with beer in hand merge into clusters and produce a multilingual cacophony interspersed with polite laughter.

Sprinkled throughout the room, the Mao-suited delegates gesture vigorously as they rap with Third World representatives. They appear trim, enthusiastic, but above all, serious.

"They are really well trained," observed a Zambian delegate. "They came here for one purpose only — to work."

Carrying the work ethic beyond Calvin's wildest imagination, the China delegates — 42 men and six women — devote practically every waking moment to their task with a religious sense of mission.

Their goals, UN Sinologists agree, are three-fold:
• To know the inner dynamics of the UN.
• To understand the American people, and keep tabs on the ever-shifting public opinion.
• To advance their views on world affairs. Knowing the United Nations entails studying the archaic formalities and procedural cobwebs responsible for UN paralysis in times of crisis. Observers pointed out that during November the Chinese quietly and diligently learned their homework.

But as China became more attuned to the pulses and throbs of the international body, she began to assert herself, mainly against what she believes is a resurgence of Soviet expansionism.

Chiao Kuan-hua in the General Assembly and Huang Hua in the Security Council have replaced the usual "Dale Carnegieisms with devastating criticism of "Russian imperialism."

Calling the Soviet government a "revisionist renegade clique which has betrayed . . . the people of the whole world," Huang emphasized on the day India invaded Pakistan that Russia has "flagrantly abused the veto power" against "the will of 104 countries."

Soviet Ambassador Yakov Malik, without taking off his shoe, promptly accused the Chinese of "slander" and of encouraging a "policy of bloody terror in East Pakistan."

American Ambassador George Bush watched the verbal volleys with outward equanimity and inward delight.

"The U.S. must be ecstatic, getting some breathing room for once," a neutral delegate commented. "The antagonism between China and Russia is worse than I thought."

But because China and the U.S. took the same stand in the Indo-Pakistani debate, many observers believe an unwritten alliance between the two powers is on the verge of crystallizing.

The delegation's second task, understanding America, is a formidable one — even for Americans.

For hard information, they devour newspapers — everything from the Christian Science Monitor to the Daily News, from the Village Voice to the Wall Street Journal. They also subscribe to Time, Newsweek and U.S. News and World Reports.

In keeping with McLuhan, they have ordered 72 color TV sets, one for each hotel room. Television, like a distorting mirror, reflects culture erratically: deodorant commercials chop up quality and peurile programs alike. The Chinese are reportedly fascinated.

They are especially aghast at the amount of sex and violence on television, according to Mike Kamba, of the Tanzania mission, who attended Peking's welcome party.

"They told me it was part and parcel of an exploitative society," he recalled. "One of them asked me what in heck does an innocent product like toothpaste have to do with bikinis? It's a good question."

"Their worst speculations about American culture have been confirmed electronically," he added. "TV presents an overall image of self-destruction, like the Mission Impossible tapes."

As far as advancing their world views, the diplomats aim primarily at Third World colleagues. Shunning the hard sell, they rely on the Doyle Dane Bernbach approach of downplaying the recently publicized socio-technological advances within China.

Milliken primary plan told

By JOANNA FIRESTONE
State News Staff Writer

Under the Milliken plan, which was introduced in both houses less than one hour after its formal release, each political party would determine how its delegates would be allocated among Michigan's 19 congressional districts. The GOP and Democratic State Central Committees would also choose whether to put the primary on a "winner take all" or percentage basis.

"The bill introduced today was purposely left wide open," Rep. Michael A. Dively, R-Traverse City, a major architect of the bill, said. "The latitude was allowed so that each party can abide by their individual party dictates. Technically, it would be impossible for one form to fit the needs of both parties."

State Democrats, he noted, have 132 votes at their national convention this year while the Republicans have only 48 votes and cannot split their ballots into partial votes as can the Democrats.

Milliken's proposal does specify, however, that at least 75 per cent of the delegates must be elected from the congressional districts. The remaining delegates and alternates may be located at large.

Dively said this type of delegate mix would provide each party with a means of minority group representation.

The Milliken proposal, Dively explained to newsmen, consists of five steps, beginning on the first Tuesday of March. At that time, the secretary of state would issue a list of the individuals considered by the state central committee of each party and the national press to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination.

On the same day, the chairman of the state central committees of each participating party would certify to the secretary of state the allocation of delegates, alternates, and at-large delegates and the procedure whereby they would be elected.

The Michigan legislature opened the 1972 session Wednesday with very brief meetings that saw the introduction in both chambers of identical presidential primary bills.

An apparent move to speed the passage of the legislation, Sen. Milton Zaagman, R-Grand Rapids, and Rep. Michael A. Dively, R-Traverse City, simultaneously introduced bills that would give Michigan a presidential primary in May.

Following the end of the opening House session, Dively held a press conference in which he distributed copies of the bill and explained various aspects of the legislation.

Prior to Wednesday's opening session, political leaders from both parties expressed hope that a quick compromise to

The presidential candidates would then have two weeks to provide the secretary with a list of delegates pledged to them. Candidates not filing lists of delegates would not be allowed on the ballot. Then, on May 9, a statewide presidential preference primary would be conducted, the results of which would be certified to

The bill could be worked out in time for the spring election to be held.

In other legislative action, the Senate passed over the pending billboard control bill during its 34-minute meeting and after a speedy reading of new bills, adjourned to spend the remainder of the day in committee or other meetings.

While the lower chamber spent over an hour in session no action was taken on any bill with most of the meeting devoted to a debate over local control of high school athletics.

The House did vote to give special consideration to the criminal code revisions bill, which most observers believe will not pass without extensive debate and amendment.

Bargaining unit--who will belong?

By STEVE WATERBURY
State News Staff Writer

News Background

If either of the two prospective faculty collective bargaining agents at MSU should succeed in securing a sufficient number of signed authorization cards to petition the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) for an election, the question of which employees will be included in the bargaining unit will be confronted.

Full-time faculty members on the tenure track would comprise the nucleus of the bargaining unit, but debate is likely to arise on the question of whether such academic staff members as librarians, counselors and academic advisers would be appropriately included in the unit.

The answer to his and other questions concerning the delineation of the faculty bargaining unit may be soon forthcoming when the employment commission rules on two pending cases involving Michigan universities.

MERC decision
If the MSU chapter of the American Assn. of University Professors (AAUP) or MSU Faculty Associates (MSUFA) petitions for a MERC-supervised election, representatives of the two organizations and of the University administration will present arguments for their respective definition of the bargaining unit before a MERC trial examiner.

The trial examiner will then issue a recommended decision to the commission, and the commission will then either affirm or modify the trial examiner's decision.

In defining a bargaining unit, MERC looks for a community of interest among the affected employees, based largely on a commonality of wages, hours and working conditions.

Because MSUFA's appeal is reportedly strong among academic staff employees (librarians, counselors and academic advisers), it is likely to argue for a broad-based definition of the bargaining unit that would include this group.

The AAUP, which has sent mailings to all faculty members with the rank of instructor and above and to librarians, is likely to argue for a more restricted bargaining unit.

In both cases however, the final decision as to the shape of the bargaining unit that the organization will seek has not been made.

An analysis of the sources of the authorization cards received by the prospective agent is often conducted before it identifies its bargaining unit.

If a union finds it has strong appeal with a particular borderline group, it is likely to

AUSJ to hear appeal

The All-University Student Judiciary (AUSJ) has decided to hear an appeal asking that the results of the election of student representatives-at-large to the Academic Council be voided, Pat Martin, judiciary chairman, said Wednesday.

The appeal, filed by Ron Johnson, Detroit sophomore, charges that the election procedures did not allow minority students an opportunity to determine their own representatives to the council because white students were allowed to vote. Johnson's appeal was filed final week of fall term.

The employment relations commission is presently reviewing the recommendations of Trial Examiner James P. Kurtz in two cases involving Eastern Michigan University and Wayne State University.

The decision of MERC in these cases will set a precedent for faculty bargaining unit decisions at MSU and other Michigan universities.

Johnson was elected representative in the category reserved for blacks with the most votes (307) in that category.

"I am surprised that the judiciary decided to hear the case because I expected them to be very legalistic and technical in their decision," Johnson said. "The judiciary is known to go by the rules so I expected that my basically emotional appeal would have been ousted by this time."

Johnson also said that he does not think AUSJ will rule in his favor. He said he expects the case will ultimately be heard by the Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board.

2.1 million leave India

Indian officials in Calcutta have ordered more trucks, trains and boats to handle the increasing exodus of Bengali refugees, who had promised to return to Bangladesh once Sheikh Mujibur Rahman himself came back.

A government spokesman said Wednesday 2.1 million refugees already had left Indian camps for Bangladesh since India defeated the Pakistani army in what was once East Pakistan last month.

This leave 7.8 million to be sent back by the end of February — the deadline the Indians have set for ending the refugee problem.

South less segregated

The government reported Wednesday in Washington that 11 Southern states for the first time have fewer black pupils in totally segregated schools than does the North.

The South also has widened its gap over the North in the number of blacks attending mostly white schools, the U.S. Office for Civil Rights said in its first preliminary report on 1971-72 enrollments.

Only 9.2 per cent (or 290,390) black Southern pupils attend all-black schools, the report said, compared with 11.2 per cent or 325,874 in the 32 northern and western states.

The greatest segregation remains in the six border states and the District of Columbia where 24.2 per cent (or 162,578) pupils still attend segregated schools, the report said.

Wallace to run again

George C. Wallace will formally announce his candidacy for president on the Democratic ticket in Tallahassee, Fla., Thursday with a promise to return the party he abandoned in 1968 to "grass roots control," informed sources said Wednesday.

The Alabama governor planned to fly into Florida's Capitol city with a retinue of 95 aides, legislators, state officials and newsmen for a 9:15 a.m. news conference.

Wallace, 52, has selected Tallahassee as the site for his announcement because of the importance he attaches to Florida's March 14 presidential primary.

Spending not planned

The Agriculture Dept. said Wednesday in Washington it does not plan to spend an additional $198 million available for food stamps this year but will not hesitate to do so if it is needed.

Congress allowed $2.2 billion for food stamps in the year ending June 30. The department, however, says only a little more than $2 billion will be required to take care of needy recipients.

"It's news to me," said Asst. Secretary of Agriculture Richard E. Lyng, who oversees the food program. "We haven't had any limit put on us for what we can spend for food stamps."

Song 'Dixie' not racial

The song "Dixie" is not racially abusive, the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals said Tuesday in St. Louis, Mo. in upholding the suspension of 29 black pupils who walked out a school assembly where the tune was played.

The court said in the literature dealing with the history of the song, it is best described as a "typical American song with a gay and catchy tune" and it does not appear as a "badge of slavery."

A request that the court forbid the playing of "Dixie" at school-related functions in the Jonesboro, Ark. school district was denied.

Colburn urges citizen panels

By BILL WHITING
State News Staff Writer

The time has come to diversify local government and involve more people in the political process, according to East Lansing City Councilman George A. Colburn.

Speaking before the Lansing Area Democratic Business and Professional Association Tuesday, Colburn said a recent poll showed that only 10 percent of all Americans ever attend a public meeting of any sort and he recommended several changes in the structure of East Lansing government which he hopes will improve the local situation.

"I want to see the 1972 voter registration process giving everybody access to the voting process so that all 40,000 of the eligible voters in East Lansing would be registered for the presidential election," Colburn said.

The fledgling councilman recommended that every opportunity be given to register new voters. He said he would like to see deputy registrars appointed among all city employees, including police and firemen, along with others in University residence halls, banks and schools.

"We should deputize any person in the city who will take the time to come down and take the two hour course in procedures," he added.

In addition to getting people out to vote, Colburn told the group of 60 labor leaders and businessmen that the city should take a more active role in encouraging citizen participation in government decisions. He indicated he is in favor of a broader use of ad hoc citizen committees as fact-finding bodies in assisting the city council.

The council voted in December to establish such a committee to study alternatives to the defunct cross-campus route. Colburn said he is currently working with a Project: City Hall committee and three environmental groups in drafting suggestions to establish a committee on local environmental problems.

Colburn also expressed a desire to get the council out of the confines of city hall by occasionally meeting in the neighborhood schools near areas to be studied. He suggested that such a move would increase people's interest and "our own sensibilities of their concerns."

We should do what we can to foster neighborhood associations where each neighborhood would elect a city council representative," he said. "That way people would always know what the city council was doing at an upcoming meeting."

Colburn explained that he based his plan on one used in Los Angeles, Calif., where "neighborhood" are elected to keep informed of council proceedings and transmit them to their respective neighbors. He also suggested that a city "ombudsman" be employed as a community relations official to take some of the pressure off the city manager.

Since being swept into office by a large student turnout in November, Colburn said he has received some criticism for the actions and reforms he has promoted.

"We weren't surprised at some of the hostility we experienced in social circles and the media," he said. "We will continue to foster changes — changes which may be hard to accept for some."

In turn, Colburn had some words of criticism for state Highway Dept. officials who he said reacted "negatively" to a campaign against the cross-campus route. "The route was voted down," he said. "They gave George and myself credit for the highway," he said. "The credit goes to the people of Lansing, the young and the old stood up and said enough."

Washington (AP) — Government tax investigators have zeroed in on 328 drug traffickers in 26 states and assessed them more than $17 million in taxes and penalties, most of it uncollected, officials said Wednesday.

High Treasury Dept. officials supplied the figures at a news conference called to report on the first six months of one part of President Nixon's anti-narcotics offensive. It is aimed at getting drug traffickers on income tax violations.

Eugene T. Rossides, asst. Treasury secretary for enforcement, said the results should be a strong reminder to traffickers "to get out of the illegal drug traffic business or face up to intensive tax investigation."

"Huge amounts of money are flowing in this traffic," said Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Johnnie M. Walters. "Down the road, we think we're going to see very satisfactory results."

The program is designed to single out alleged traffickers in the middle- and upper-echelon of the drug distribution system and put them under close tax investigation to try to nab them for tax evasion, failure to file returns or similar violations.

Rossides said that state and local police were asked to furnish the names of traffickers. He said a federal committee up the list but only requiring substantial information that a person selected for investigation was involved in trafficking, smuggling or other illegal activities. The government refused to supply the names of those picked for special tax audits. Only that of Gregory T. Walters, who pleaded guilty to tax evasion charges, was disclosed. Officials said Walters was sentenced to five years in prison and fined $3,000.

Rossides said he could not estimate of the 328 persons represented by all traffickers nationally. "Our aim is to take the out of the illegal drug business," he said. "If we squeeze and strangle the middle- and upper-echelon we will have made some progress."

He said the government exceeded its original plan of selecting 400 traffickers for investigation by June. Rossides said the group chosen so far included 100 traffickers. "All ethnic, racial and religious groups are involved," he said.

TRUSTEES TO STUDY CUTS

Spending plan expected

By MICHAEL FOX
State News Staff Writer

Action on the dean's post in the College of Education and a cutback in University spending can be expected at the January board of trustees meeting, informed sources said this week.

The central administration will probably recommend to the trustees at the Jan. 21 meeting a new dean for the College of Education, the second largest college of MSU with a fall 1971 enrollment of 6,123.

John E. Ivey, Jr., resigned as dean of the College of Education on April 1, 1971, after nine years in that post. William B. Hawley, professor of education, is currently the acting dean of the college, which is one of three MSU colleges currently without deans.

Selection procedures are still underway in the College of Human Ecology and James Madison College to locate new deans for these two colleges.

The College of Education selection committee, however, has completed its work and Provost John E. Canton is now reviewing the recommendations made by the committee to the central administration.

All recommendations on new deans are made to the trustees by President Wharton and he will require some time to review whatever recommendation Canton might make to him.

It is believed that Wharton decided this week on the procedures through which the University's $76 million appropriation from the legislature will be cut back by 2 per cent. Gov. Milliken was forced to cut back state appropriations in order to make the Michigan budget balance.

The 2 per cent cut for MSU totals about $1.5 million, but it is not clear how that amount will be sliced from the general fund, the Agricultural Experiment Station's budget and the Cooperative Extension Service's budget.

A third central administration decision was revealed Wednesday when a spokesman announced that beginning fall 1972, color photographs will be taken at registration for the student identification cards. The switch to color photos on the identification cards comes because the old cameras are "falling apart" and the new Polaroid equipment will take color pictures, a spokesman said.

Mujib takes office oath, receives Soviet support

DACCA (AP) — Sheikh Mujibur Rahman shed his president's robes Wednesday for those of prime minister to head a parliamentary government in Bangladesh. The new nation picked up more support from behind the Iron Curtain.

Mujib was sworn in by the new president, Abu Sayeed Chowdhury, under a provisional constitution the sheik issued the night before.

The document vested most of the power of the state with the prime minister, gave no power to the president without the prime minister's consent and established a constituent assembly to draw up a permanent constitution.

During the nine-month Bangladesh revolution and two-week India-Pakistan war, Mujib held the office of president while he was a prisoner in Pakistan, charged with treason.

The government in exile had instituted Pakistan's strong man-type by rule with their only acknowledged leader, the 51-year-old sheik, at its head.

The heads of all former diplomatic missions in Dacca except those of the U.S. and Communist China attended the swearing-in ceremony Wednesday. Although without official status, the missions have remained open and operating the surrender of the Pakistan army on Dacca.

ALLEGES CONTROL OF SN

Student group seeks hearing

By JANE SEABERRY State News Staff Writer

MSU Students for a Free Press Wednesday filed a request for a hearing challenging the board of trustees for alleged violations of the Academic Freedom Report. The request alleges that the board of trustees is still controlling the State News even though the paper became a separate corporation July 1, 1972. In setting up the "dummy corporation," the board violated six sections of the Academic Freedom Report, the request said.

Chuck Will, organizer of the MSU Students for a Free Press said, "We want a student publication that is controlled and run by the students. We want to make the board of trustees honest. It has deceived the MSU community by not identifying itself with publication of the State News."

The alleged violations include the board of trustees' failure to identify itself as the sponsor of the State News as well as sponsoring the publication of the State News. The request also claims that "competition of ideas" and freedom of selection have been stifled by the State News' monopoly.

"We want to generally encourage debate, controversy and search for knowledge and truth - stated purposes and goals of the University that are not practiced," Will said. "We want freedom for students to select the publication they want to support."

Regarding the refund policy of the State News, Will said, "We tried to get the students to go and demand the refund. We're not encouraging them to do this to destroy the newspaper we love, but we feel we could get a lot better newspaper."

The organization also hopes to see a referendum held to give students control of the State News Board of Directors.

Will said that they would like to see at least a portion of the board of directors selected by members of the State News staff.

"We want the students to be at least a majority on the board of directors of the State News," he added.

"The suit is rather imaginative," John Juel, editor-in-chief of the State News, said late Wednesday. "The charge of trustee control of the State News was ridiculous in the first place since we control our own finances and our student editorial staff is legally protected from censorship from any body, even our own board of directors. The charge became even more ridiculous when the State News Board of Directors voted Tuesday to amend the corporate bylaws so the trustees would no longer have veto power over future directors.

"If there is any trustee control over the State News, direct or indirect, I fail to see where it comes from," Juel added.

The Student - Faculty Judiciary, which will act on the request, will not meet until Monday. At that time, it will decide whether to grant a hearing.

Court eases rules on use of confessions

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court has approved the criminal trials of confessions that are not "beyond a reasonable

The three dissenters, Justices William O. Douglas, William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall, would have barred such confessions as evidence.

But the majority, headed by Justice Byron R. White, said it is enough to determine that a confession is voluntary "by a preponderance of the evidence."

This judgment is made by the trial judge, usually, when a defendant contends a confession was forced out of him by police threats, inducements or violence.

The court set up the separate hearing procedure in 1964. Until then, the defendant had to challenge the confession before the jury trying him.

White said the purpose of the 1964 ruling was not to save innocent men from conviction. Rather, he said, it was to protect all defendants from being forced to condemn themselves.

"We did not then announce, or even suggest, that the fact finder

at a coercion hearing need judge voluntariness with reference to an especially severe standard of proof," said White, who wrote the 1964 decision.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Potter Stewart and Harry A. Blackmun sided with White. Justices Lewis F. Powell Jr. and William H. Rehnquist were out of the case because they were not on the court when it was argued.

Wednesday's decision still allows states to continue using the reasonable-doubt standard if they choose.

In a second ruling, the court broadened the authority of the Federal Power Commission to regulate electric utilities which operate almost entirely in one state.

The 4-2 decision affects power suppliers part of whose output makes its way across state lines. White, speaking for the majority, said the court was reluctant to upset "expert testimony" relied upon by the EPC in asserting jurisdiction over Florida Power & Light, the largest electric utility in Florida.

Justice Douglas, in dissent, said the ruling permits the EPC to regulate all one-state utilities if they connect their lines to a grid that crosses into other states.

"This illustrates how easy it is for a federal camel to take over a state tent," he commented.

Chief Justice Burger joined Douglas in objecting to the ruling. White was supported by Justices Brennan Marshall and Blackmun.

The decision on confessions rejected an appeal by Don R. Lego, a Chicago man serving a 25-to-50 year prison term for armed robbery. He said he confessed after police beat him on the head and neck with a gun butt.

The question was whether the trial judge in deciding the confession was voluntary should have used one of two standards: That it was voluntary "beyond a reasonable doubt" or that it was voluntary by "a preponderance of the evidence."

White noted that in 1970 the court held a man can be found guilty only when the jury is convinced "beyond a reasonable doubt." But, he said, the same "high standard of proof" is not necessary in assessing confessions.

Besides, White went on, it is very doubtful that using the higher standard would deter lawless conduct by police and prosecutors.

Brennan, writing for the three dissenters, said: "Just as we do

U.S. coal mining deaths reach record low in '72

WASHINGTON (AP) - Coal mining, perhaps the nation's most lethal occupation, took only 181 lives last year, the lowest since 1957, government officials said Wednesday.

Coal mine safety officials and mine operators applauded the decline in total deaths, 79 fewer than in 1970 and 22 fewer than in the best previous year of 1969, was due in part to a 45-day strike that kept many bituminous coal mines closed.

The rate at which miners died while actually on the job, also declined to a record low of 0.74 deaths for every million hours in mines. The rate is down from 1.02 in 1970 and 0.85 in 1969, the best year for the death rate as well as for total deaths.

Over the death rate for mining remains an estimated 25 times higher than the average rate for all industry.

Federal Bureau of Mines released the figures in response to a congressional inquiry.

"While the statistics may show some sign of improvement in safety conditions, the improvement has not yet been as great as it should be," Hechler said through his office. "We don't get safety until those administering the law get tough."

which federal inspectors are denied vacations and kept inside mines as much as possible during the late fall and winter months, when for some reason most mine disasters seem to occur.

A spokesman for the United Mine Workers union said the death rate remains too high. "We feel that management still needs to put safety ahead of production, and that safety will improve immeasurably if they ever do this," the spokesman said.

Mine owners said the number of deaths remains too high, but called the decline heartening. "These encouraging statistics clearly indicate that the Bureau of Mines, coal mine operators, and the miners themselves are taking seriously their responsibilities," said Joseph E. Moody, president of the Bituminous Coal Operators' Assn., Inc.

Rep. Ken Hechler, D-W. Va., said the Bureau of Mines still is not living up to the spirit of the 1969 Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act, which he helped sponsor.

The primary problem: past time for a solution

Chaos once again tops the agenda at the Capitol. With time running out, the legislators and the governor himself are bickering over the possibilities of a Michigan presidential primary but not doing anything about it. Both parties want basically the same thing, but the game is seeing who can put the legislation through and thereby receive credit. Essentially, Michigan's politics are hung up on the means, at the expense of the end result.

Action to reform Michigan's outmoded process of electing Democratic delegates to the national convention began when that party's national committee instructed all states to move the delegate selection process to the same year as the presidential election. The Democrats began making noises about this, not so much to get it done, but to appear to have at least tried to accomplish legislation.

Both parties were further spurred into action by the recent Age of Majority Bill. Presently Michigan elects delegates during the off-year statewide primary. The latest was in August 1970. Thus some 1.2 million new voters will be denied any say in the election of delegates unless legislation to create a special election in April of this year is passed.

For some months now, the Democrats have been working on a plan to create a special delegate election in April 1972. This would afford new voters a voice in the national convention.

Then last Friday, Gov. Milliken surprised the Democrats with a call for a May presidential primary. This one-upmanship, while it may have several good points, served only to complicate matters. The Democrats are hesitant to act on this new development, and the Republicans do not want to support Democratic legislation.

Milliken's plan is almost the same as one the Democrats dreamed up and then rejected two years ago. This calls into question whether Milliken is sincere in his proposal or just trying to make a little political hay from the issue.

There are drawbacks to both plans. Electing new precinct delegates, as the Democrats would like, could result in party takeover by a well-organized group of 18- to 20-year olds. Even the remote possibility of such a coup is sufficient for Democratic stalwarts to scotch the plan. Milliken's proposal could be costly and still not show the true nature of voter intent.

Without question, the present election process in Michigan is not as democratic as it should be. Party officials have most of the say in the election of delegates. The people are not clearly represented.

A statewide "open" and "bound" primary holds the answer. Under this scheme, voters would have the "open" option to vote in either party primary. Delegates would be allotted to the various candidates on a percentage basis determined by the share of the vote received. The presidential candidates would make the actual appointment of individuals to fill their share of the delegate slate. All delegates would be "bound" to vote for their mandated candidate on the first ballot at the national convention. They would be freed to bargain on any subsequent ballots.

It is doubtful that this scheme will be adopted - it is too simple and straightforward. Whatever the case, though, one thing is clear: This is an election year and if something is not done very soon the problem of popular participation in primaries will become academic.

Overcrowding chronic at E.L. watering holes

Throughout the past year this newspaper campaigned vigorously for the lower age of majority. After all, today's 18-year-old is much more mature than his counterpart of years ago. He was already subject to some of the responsibilities of adulthood, the draft being one obvious instance. There was no reason why he should not have been given all the privileges of a legal adult.

One particular privilege which unexpectedly survived the legislature was the granting of the right to drink to 18-year-olds. Some had fears that 18-year-old imbibing would result in carnage on the highways, increased degeneracy and more acne. Such fears have turned out to be groundless. The 18-year-olds of Michigan have shown they can handle their liquor as well as any 21-year-old can.

However, an even more hazardous consequence has arisen from lowering the drinking age. The local bars are so crowded with 18- to 20-year-olds being introduced to such personalities as Harvey Wallbanger and Sneaky Pete that there is practically no room for the bars' former hardcore clientele - the 21-year-olds - plus. While local establishments are celebrating the age of majority special, the previously enfranchised drinker is forced to truck out to Mason or Williamston to find an empty barstool.

A strange turn of events has occurred along the Ohio-Michigan border where Toledo residents are now heading on up to Detroit to cop some real brew. Another weird coincidence is that 18-year-olds probably had a better chance of sneaking into a bar under the higher age of majority than of finding a chair in a pub under the lower drinking age.

Plainly, some remedial action should be taken. The overcrowding of the East Lansing bars must be terminated with rapidity. For two weeks the bars of East Lansing have resembled the black holes of Calcutta. Nevermore.

The alternatives are two: chase the 18-year-olds out or open up more bars. Although the former may be tempting to some in the 21-plus age bracket, the latter seems much more feasible. The time has come for the city of East Lansing and Meridian Township to grant more liquor licenses so that there will be room for all of us, 18 and 21-year-olds alike, to quaff at our leisure.

Council participation a must

Now is the time for all good students to come to the aid of their party because if they don't their party is liable to fold.

Party? Party? Did someone mention a party?

Unfortunately, I'm not talking about a good ol' fashioned MSU beer brawl. I'm talking about the student power on the Academic Council, that funny little group of faculty that used to meet once a month to talk about dog ordinances and censuring.

But things have changed. Students now have a vote on the council.

And the council talks about more than just faculty interests. For instance, they passed a resolution last term dropping the 4.5 and 0.5 grades. They are also in the middle of discussion about the possibility of increasing the flexibility of the general education program.

That means that students might be able to fulfill their general education requirements in courses other than Natural Science, American Thought and Language, Social Science and Humanities. There aren't many things that are nearer and dearer to the students' hearts than grades and University College requirements.

The council also makes recommendations on faculty salaries which indirectly affect student fees. The student vote on the council in this respect gives the student a say as to where his hard-earned pennies go.

So how does this fit into the call for student interest? The answer is fairly obvious. The Academic Council is a powerful body. It has a great deal of influence on the academic fate of the students. And for the first time, the students have a say on these matters too.

But the problem is that the students do not realize this yet.

Students apathy toward the council was most apparent in the at-large elections. Some 1,333 students voted. The average turnout in an ASMSU election for a University-wide position is 8,000.

Once students realize that the power in this University lies not in ASMSU but in the Academic Council, the sooner they will be able to cash in on the power.

Don't get me wrong. Student response through the COGS, ASMSU, and college appointments has been very encouraging. But student apathy is abounding in the lack of at-large response to the standing committees.

This is another mistake. The standing committees' recommendations to the council do affect the decisions of the council. For example, the curriculum committee approves all changes in curriculum and the Business Administration committee works with the University Bookstore.

The implementation of student representation in the council was done on a temporary basis. The whole plan was for review by the council in May 1972. If the plan fails, and the student do not take advantage of the opportunity are being given, it is obvious that project will be abandoned.

Granted, there have been problems in the selection process. The students who have been up to their eyes in hassles over the minority question procedural illegalities. But the point is they are interested in ironing out the problems.

The handful of students working each other and hassling each other do not carry this thing through all themselves. They need the support of University-at-large.

If they don't get some help the project is liable to fold.

Mujib: at the pinnacle

By ARNOLD ZEITLIN
Associated Press Writer

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan (AP) — Sheikh Mujibur Rahman stands at the pinnacle of his political career, during which he repeatedly has stepped from jail as a figure of greater stature than when he was imprisoned.

After spending almost 11 of the past 25 years behind bars or under house arrest, Sheikh Mujib, 51, is now the first prime minister of newly independent Bangladesh, with more than 75 million Bengali-speaking, predominantly Moslem citizens.

In West Pakistan, he still is regarded officially as a "free national of Pakistan and a chosen leader of the people of East Pakistan."

But his departure Saturday from Rawalpindi after nine months of solitary confinement was the final break of the links between West and East which for almost a quarter of a century formed the Moslem state of Pakistan.

But the sheik cast a shadow of a new relationship when he said in New Delhi on the way to Dacca: "I return with no hatred in my heart."

Rancor between East and West Pakistan may be mitigated by the undeniable fact that both Sheikh Mujib and President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto of Pakistan have what they wanted - each with control of their own part of what once was a nation.

Both are able to blame the deposed and arrested military president, Gen. Mohammed Yahya Khan, for the split.

Sheik Mujib emerged from his imprisonment in 1969 after nearly 10 years in custody to become an unparalleled winner of Pakistan's election in December 1970. His party, 167 of the 169 National Assembly members from East Pakistan to take an absolute majority in the 313-member house has yet to sit.

He rode to power on the strength of a point demand calling for the political, financial and military autonomy of East Pakistan.

After he proclaimed the six-point early 1966, Sheikh Mujib was imprisoned under the safety rules of the iron-fisted administration of Field Marshal Mohammed Ayub Khan.

Ayub always regarded the sheik a danger. Ayub's martial law administration jailed him in 1958 for more than a year then kept him under detention under a year internment order. He was arrested February 1962 and held for six months.

In May 1966 he was arrested and then almost immediately released and placed on trial for the so-called Agartala conspiracy.

In this case, Sheikh Mujib, politicians and civil servants and military officers were accused of plotting to secede and turn over East Pakistan to the Indians.

The trial was never concluded. A movement in East and West toppled Sheikh Mujib was freed, a greater hero.

"The sheik's detentions taken together observed Bengali journalist Ataurul Karim said, "did not make him so popular as involvement in the Agartala case did."

Sheik Mujib was arrested for the first time in Pakistan in March 1948. At that time student leader, he was elected still in jail in 1949 as secretary of the Awami League. The party grew up to become the Moslem League which had led the independence to Pakistan.

After imprisonment in 1952, he was elected general secretary of the Mujib became a provincial minister in East in 1954. When the government was suspended, he was the long minister.

A.H.M. Shamsudoha, a former minister in the Ayub Cabinet who headed the party in Dacca in the early '50s, recalled Mujib was the only politician who, threatened with arrest, waited patiently to be marched off to jail.

In the same style he waited last year for what could have been death, appearing knowing at least 36 hours before the army was about to strike against him. Negotiations were continuing for a settlement of East-West tensions. Mujib committed himself to a Socialist program of nationalization and government regulation.

However, as an individual, he was associated with some of Pakistan's wealthiest men. When not in politics he worked for an insurance company reportedly owned at least one jute mill.

"Hit 'em again! Hit 'em again! Harder! Harder!"

ART BUCHWALD

The Antiprotocol Office

WASHINGTON — In the supersecret documents that columnist Jack Anderson released, it was revealed that both President Nixon and Henry Kissinger supported Pakistan much more strongly than the country was led to believe, and also were far more hostile toward India than anyone had reason to assume.

The transcript of one of the high-level meetings held at the White House during the crisis shows that Kissinger took a very tough stand toward India. Part of the minutes read: "Dr. Kissinger also directed that henceforth we show a certain coolness to the Indians; the Indian ambassador is not to be treated at too high a level."

Now while this sounds petty when you read it in cold print, it is obvious to everyone that the most powerful nation in the world must show its displeasure when it believes another country has let it down.

One of the ways this is accomplished is to punish the ambassador as Dr. Kissinger recommended.

But how is this done? Deep in the bowels of the State Dept. there is a bureau whose sole function is to make life miserable for the embassy of a country that the United States is feuding with. It is known as the antiprotocol office and it is at present headed up by Horace Bitterman, a former guard at Attica prison.

I talked to Mr. Bitterman the other day, and while he refused to confirm or deny that the screws had been put to the Indian ambassador, he did tell me how the antiprotocol office operates.

"When we get alerted by the White House that the President wishes to show a certain coolness to a country, we go immediately into action. The first thing we do is notify the sanitation department not to pick up the embassy's garbage. Then we send out a fleet of used cars to block the embassy's driveway.

"We also begin digging a subway station in front of the ambassador's residence with our workers starting to drill at 5 o'clock in the morning. This serves two purposes. It prevents the ambassador from getting any sleep; and the dug-up street makes it impossible for him to hold any diplomatic receptions because people have nowhere to park."

"That's pretty good," I said. "What do you do when someone in the White House says that an ambassador is not to be treated at too high a level?"

"The first thing we do is notify all the restaurants in town that if the ambassador reserves a table, he is to be seated next to the kitchen door."

"Then we send out word to the town's caterer than when the ambassador holds a party he must be provided with three day-old hors d'oeuvres."

"We also telex all Washington hostesses to say that if he is invited to a dinner party, the President wishes him to be seated 'below the salt.'"

"When the ambassador requests to see the secretary of state, he is given an audience with a code clerk trainee. We tow his car away while he's in the building."

"You people don't fool around," I said. "We don't set policy here. We only follow orders," Mr. Bitterman said.

"What if the ambassador gets angry and goes back to his own country in a huff?"

"Then," said Bitterman with a smile, "we notify the airlines and they arrange to lose his luggage."

OUR READERS' MIND

Bar solution: busing

To the Editor:

As a concerned citizen of East Lansing and a student at MSU I feel I must speak out on a serious problem in our community brought about by the recent advent of Jan. 1. I am sure many other people in the 12 and over class are aware of the situation to which I am referring: the crisis of overcrowding in our bars.

How many drinking establishments must a thirsty person enter before he can find a place to sit down? How many times must he be forced to move from bar to bar before he earns the right to a pitcher? How often must he be turned away from the door to drunkenness? What about the students without cars to carry them further in this seemingly-endless quest?

Ads aid 'Uncola' image

By KEVIN P. KEEFE

Advertising has played a major role in establishing Bib Label Lithiated Lemon-Lime Soda as a major soft drink, a representative from J. Walter Thompson said. The firm created Seven-Up's successful

"Uncola" campaign.

George Berry, an account executive for the Thompson firm, world's largest advertising agency, spoke at a meeting

Tuesday of the MSU Advertising Club. Berry joined the agency in 1970 and now heads the Seven-
Up account.

"Seven-Up is a fun account," he said. "There are talented people on both sides, and we've been happy with the results of the Uncola campaign."

Berry outlined his client's history, beginning in 1928 when Seven-Up was known as Bib
Label Lithiated Lemon-Lime
Soda. In those days the beverage was aimed at a different market, with claims like "tunes tiny tummies" and "for home and hospital."

By 1960, Seven-Up had become the third largest selling soft drink in the world.
However, in 1967 profits were starting to drop, Berry said, and a decreasing share of the market prompted some intensive research.

"We found that people weren't thinking of Seven-Up as a soft drink," Berry said. "We were shocked to find out that our product was thought of as a mixer and elixer!"
Further research revealed that

Seven-Up did not have enough appeal among young people in the 16 to 24 age bracket, who are, according to Berry, the greatest consumers of soft drinks. Cola flavored beverages were the leaders.

"Until then, people usually associated soft drinks with cola," Berry remarked. "Seven-
Up had to be a cola, but it couldn't be a cola. Hence, the Uncola!"

The next step was to get 475
bottlers to accept the new idea.
After the initial presentation in Chicago, only two applauded.
"The rest almost walked out,"
Berry said.

But careful marketing and a zany "un" campaign began to pay off. Berry said sales have increased 45 per cent since 1967, and Seven-Up is still outpacing the industry.

The advertising club presentation included slides of Seven-Up billboards and tapes from TV commercials, all emphasizing the name Uncola.

Asked if the public might get tired of the Uncola campaign, Berry answered: "There is now a 92 per cent awareness among Americans that Seven-Up is the Uncola. With that high a percentage our job is to keep the Uncola campaign fresh."

Academic Council lacks Madison rep

James Madison College missed its first opportunity for participation in the processes of the Academic Council Tuesday.
Madison has yet to select its representative to the Academic Council, which held its first meeting of the new year Tuesday.

The situation will be rectified however, when elections are held next Tuesday and Wednesday to select the Academic Council representative along with representatives to two other governing groups and the Madison Evaluation Advisory Board.

Susan Dinerstein, chairman of the Madison senate, said the lack of representation is due to the confusion and disorganization of the implementation of new bylaws late last term.

Ms. Dinerstein said final and Thanksgiving vacation also contributed to the delay of the elections.

Ms. Dinerstein said that the college received permission from the provost's office to delay the election until the new governing structure of Madison had a chance to get started and formulate procedures for the selection of representatives.

Swimmers face tough weekend

By STEVE STEIN
State News Sports Writer

MSU's swimming team opens its Big Ten dual meet season this weekend with two of its most evenly-matched opponents, Michigan and Minnesota. In addition to having to contend with the Badgers and Gophers, Spartan swimmers will have to face both schools within 19 miles of their opponents' home pools. The Spartans will fly to Madison, Wis. Friday to meet the Badgers on Friday night, stay overnight, and then fly early Saturday morning to the Minnesota campus, arriving just hours before the start of the scheduled afternoon meet.

MSU's swimmers are ranked 1-1 in the Big Ten in swimming, with a 3-2 overall dual meet record and are 1-1 in the Big Ten, beating Iowa and losing to Michigan. The Badgers finished second in the Big Ten dual meet to Southern Illinois and finished fourth in the Big Ten. MSU did not compete because of its bye week from the Relays last weekend. MSU's swimmers are out to improve upon last season's fourth place finish. The dual meet results are almost forced to take a back seat to the results of the Big Ten meet, which will be held in the IM pool March 2, 3, and 4.

Dittrich says he's happy with early track showing

While the indoor track season does not officially begin until January 29, Fran Dittrich's squad is already chafing at the bit.

Though superlatives were not in order for the diminutive coach he appeared pleased when he said simply, "We've got a good team this year."

Dittrich's optimism is fed by the continuing improvement of his field event men, particularly in the pole vault and shotput, areas depleted by injury last season.

Jim Stevenson, expeted to be MSU's top vaulter last year, was grounded with a broken arm and never saw action. Marv Roberts, whose tosses are now within a range termed as respectable by Dittrich, grimaced through last season with a shoulder injury.

The Spartans' strength, however, remains with its speed.

"We have, probably, our most strength in the dashes," Dittrich said.

The sprinters, led by mercurial Herb Washington and top prospect Marshall Dill will keep the Spartans in contention, but the optimism will be manifested in victory if the field men pull their weight.

HARLOT SPLITS IN 3 DAYS!

BEAL FILM GROUP PRESENTS FOR PERSONS OVER 18 YEARS OF AGE -

NEW LOCATION: 106B Wells

Wolf Wolf Wolf

Everyone has heard the story of the little boy who cried wolf, until no one would believe him when there really WAS one. Well, the Beal Film Group knows that many persons feel that way about ADULT FILMS. Often, the audience has been promised everything - only to be given nothing.

The film with word of mouth

is a complete departure from anything we have ever shown previously. HARLOT has broken records in New York, San Francisco, and Los Angeles; over 200,000 people have seen the film - many have come twice. HARLOT is the film that makes all other adult films immediately passe. HARLOT is the film to which all others will be compared in the future. It is the ULTIMATE adult film.

A hard act to follow

The minimum admission was set by the distributor at $2.00. The distributor felt that a $2.00 admission would discourage those who were merely curious - those who hadn't seen an erotic film before and wondered what they were like. After viewing the film ourselves, the Beal Film Group agrees - HARLOT IS NOT FOR BEGINNERS. (The theatrical price was $5).

Those desiring admission to this film must sign the following statement:
a) I am 18 yrs of age (or older), b) I am aware of the nature/content of this film and came of my own free will (not coerced in any manner to attend), c) I believe that the state should not interfere in the private behavior of adults which does not adversely affect others.

HARLOT IS RATED X - INCREDIBLY X

You must be 18 yrs of age and able to prove it. All persons must have ID - those without will not be admitted. NO EXCEPTIONS will be made.

POLICE BRIEFS

A COED TOLD police she was sexually molested by four white males who pinched her buttocks and attempted to kiss her while she was walking near Shaw Lane and Bogue Street Monday evening. The coed told police she would be able to identify the men if she saw them again.

A MALE NONSTUDENT reported to police Tuesday that a ring valued at $200 was taken from a first floor restroom in the Eppley Center. The man told police he took the ring off to wash his hands, left without the ring, and when he returned the ring was missing.

POLICE SAID SOMEONE took a chair from the Shaw Hall lounge, ripped one leg off it, and threw the chair and the leg from an upper story window. The chair landed in a tree, and was discovered at 7 a.m. Tuesday.

POLICE STOPPED a car for a traffic violation at Kalamazoo Street and Lot J Tuesday at 3 a.m. and observed a gas can and a seven foot rubber hose in the car. Police searched the car and arrested the driver, a nonstudent, for carrying a concealed weapon, a knife with a 12 - inch blade. His case has been referred to the prosecutor.

Drive planned to collect books for Vietnamese

Two students concerned about the shortage of books for educational and research purposes in the universities of Vietnam announce the opening of a book drive Wednesday.

The two, Phung thi Nguyen Hong and Tran Quoc Hue both from South Vietnam, are coordinators of the drive scheduled to last until Feb. 12.

The book drive staff consists mostly of Vietnamese students presently at MSU. They have established drop points at the main library, the engineering library and the business library.

In a letter to several university professors they said, "Since these (Vietnamese) universities will play an important part in the reconstruction and development of our country, we have decided to organize a book drive to help make the libraries of these universities more adequate to their roles."

Technical books and any that may be used in education and research are preferred, the two students said. When the drive ends the books will be sent directly to various universities in South Vietnam.

Although the drive is slated for only one month, Hue said that they envision this effort as something they hope to carry on each term. A potential contributor who misses the drive may therefore contact the students and give them books towards the next drive, he said.

In addition to the drop boxes, contributions in time, money or books may be offered by contacting either Ms. Hong at 352 W. Owen Hall, or Hue at 227 W. Owen Hall.

Women award plaque to janitor

Ray P. Lamphear, co-ordinator of maintenance and development of married housing, received a plaque and was named an honorary member of Spartan Wives at the organization's 25 anniversary open house recently.

Spokeswoman for the group, Aurelia Spengler, said that Lamphear received the honor because of his conscientious service and help to those living in married housing units. "There are 2,500 apartments in married housing," Ms. Spengler said, "Whenever we have any complaints or problems, he takes care of them."

China delegates dedicated to UN work

This was predictable. Mao's dicta call for humility and teaching by example. Faithfully, the Chinese delegates emanate the Mao mystique with relaxed self-confidence and impeccable conduct.

Chou Nan, one of the more affable delegates, took time to explain China. Speaking in English, which he learned at Peking Language Institute, he said:

"China today is neither hell nor paradise. We are experimenting, but we know we have the right orientation. The important thing is in the words of our chairman, 'China has stood up.'"

The reference is to contrast the strong China of today with the ignominious empire during the opium wars.

Chou Nan praised writers like James Reston and Edgar Snow for accurate reporting about China.

"But beware of Ross Terrill," he warned with a smile. "He is writing strictly to amuse and to entertain."

Ross Terrill is an Australian journalist who recently published two widely acclaimed articles on China in Atlantic Monthly.

"What's been happening to Lin Piao?" Chou is asked in the middle of a friendly chat.

"That question does not deserve an answer," he replied politely, as he does to any probing questions.

Since there are few women delegates in the UN, the Chinese refrain from belaboring the extent of women's liberation in China. But they have made it known that their women delegates, even if married, are addressed by maiden surnames.

They also dislike being addressed by "Mr.," which they consider irrelevant. Such titles as "Sir" and "Honorable" which denote social rank, are taboo. Best is "T'ung Chih," or "comrade."

Contrary to popular opinion, the Chinese delegates have not plugged their umbilical cords to their briefcases, toiling away 24 hours a day. On the 14th floor of the Roosevelt, work is moderated with humor and joking.

For example, after Kao Liang, press information director, appeared on the front page of the Daily News under the banner caption "SUPERSPY," he became the butt of endless teasing.

"Look Kao, you're really famous now," a colleague would point out, laughing, with newspaper in hand.

Calling someone famous in egalitarian, classless China is comparable to calling him a failure in competitive America.

Although the diplomats dismiss recreation as self-indulging and purposeless, they have been known to take short strolls and peer in store windows. This is acceptable, since it fulfills a purpose: education about America.

Their favorite educational pastime is to meet Americans — especially minorities and to work in conversation. To facilitate socializing, they opened their private hotel elevator to the public.

The Chinese have conspicuously avoided diplomatic cocktail parties. Except for an initial reception, they attended only one social function — a party at the Museum of Natural History given for pro-Peking organizations in New York.

Richard Lee, a young Chinatown Maoist with shoulder-length hair, was at the party and talked to the delegates about his coiffure.

"They don't mind long hair as long as it's a symbol of protest instead of vanity," he explained. "Of course, the Chinese have historically used hair styles to flout authoritarian governments."

The Manchus had imposed pigtails on Chinese as a sign of submission, but rebels cut them off in defiance.

Generally, the atmosphere at the Chinese headquarters remains sober. Most of the comic relief is provided by Caroline Talcott, a widow who has been living on Roosevelt's 14th floor for years and refused to move when the Chinese moved in. "It's worked out beautifully," she said in a crackling voice. "They are lovely people, lovely."

Who will belong to unit?

separate bargaining unit. If the trial examiner's recommended decision is affirmed by the commission, it may affect the outcome of a collective bargaining election at MSU.

In addition to the conflict over whether academic staff should be included in a faculty bargaining unit, a dispute is likely to occur on the status of department chairmen.

The Kurtz recommendation with respect to whether departmental chairmen be included or excluded from the faculty unit states that this decision "must rest on a close analysis of their authority and how effectively it is exercised."

In some cases, Kurtz notes, department chairmen are properly considered as part of the administration and in other cases they are representatives of the faculty.

Kurtz's EMU recommendation provides for the exclusion of all department chairmen in the university from the faculty bargaining unit.

At WSU, the contending parties assented to the inclusion of department chairmen of six of the eleven colleges into the bargaining unit on the grounds that they are not supervisors because of the small size of their departments.

In five colleges there was a dispute over whether the department chairmen should be included. The Kurtz recommendation urges that these department chairmen be excluded from the unit.

raised in the cases were whether employees of the EMU Dept. of Military Science should be included in the unit and whether the WSU Medical School faculty would be permitted to form a separate bargaining unit.

The Kurtz recommendations exclude the military science employees and include the medical school faculty members in the bargaining unit.

Lecturers — temporary faculty whose appointments are not within the tenure system — were excluded from the bargaining unit in Kurtz's EMU recommendation.

Historically the state commission and the National Labor Relations Board have been inclined toward broad definitions of bargaining units.

The EMU and the WSU cases are the first in which MERC has been asked to rule on the appropriateness of an all-faculty unit at one of the larger state universities.

Judiciary to hear appeal

"There was a hypocrisy in the election because the procedures allowed Mark Jaeger, who is not a minority representative, to run," Johnson said Wednesday.

Johnson's remark was made in reference to Mark Jaeger, Greenfield, Wis., junior, who ran in the election on the basis of his 1/16 Winnebago Indian heritage. Jaeger was the top vote-getter in the category reserved for nonwhites who are neither black nor Chicano.

Jaeger has since been disqualified by the Student Committee on Nominations on the grounds that he is not a minority representative. Jaeger's appeal against the disqualification has been held in advisement by the AUSJ until the Johnson case is settled.

"If the judiciary is honest about the representative-at-large seats being reserved for minorities, Jaeger will be removed from his seat," Johnson said.

Martin said the outcome of the Johnson case could determine whether the judiciary will hear the Jaeger case.

"The judiciary's decision to hold my case until the Johnson case is decided is quite reasonable," Jaeger said. "If the whole election is thrown out it won't make much difference what happens with my appeal."

Mark Bathurst, chairman of the Student Committee on Nominations, said Wednesday that Johnson is really appealing the decision of the board of trustees and the Academic Council to pass the Bylaws for Academic Governance.

"The bylaws require that 10 minority representatives be chosen by elections-at-large, that is, by elections that involve the total student community."

"We sympathize with Johnson's objections but we had no choice but to follow the stipulations of the bylaws," Bathurst said.

Johnson's hearing is scheduled for Jan. 18. The judiciary has assumed that the hearing will be open because it is not a disciplinary case. Martin said that the judiciary would probably honor a request for a closed hearing.

Primary plans revealed

the chairman of the state central committees for implementation at the national conventions.

Milliken's endorsement of a presidential primary came on Friday, but much to the frustration of Republicans and Democrats alike, the governor failed to spell out specific dates and procedures until Wednesday.

The primary proposal was offered as an alternative to a special election of new precinct delegates in April, a measure now in the Senate and sponsored by state Democrats.

The special April election was introduced to comply with a national mandate for all Democratic state organizations to elect new delegates before the 1972 presidential election.

"The idea of a presidential primary did not come out of the sky like the Ten Commandments," Dively said in response to Democratic cries of "one-upmanship" by the GOP. "The idea has been worked on for some time now."

Milliken said the special April election "would merely change the date of an indirect process of picking national convention delegates."

Democratic reaction to the governor's proposal changed during the course of Wednesday afternoon from mildly favorable to semi-hostile.

Meeting behind closed doors, Democratic lawmakers decided that the only way they would accept Milliken's plan is the GOP will allow them to hold their own version of the primary.

The Democrats said they will approve the primary bill only if they are allowed to elect precinct delegates through the primary and retain the use of a state convention to choose national delegates. The precinct delegates would elect county and district delegates who would elect state delegates, who, in turn would elect national party convention delegates.

A Milliken aide said late Wednesday that the governor is studying the amended version, but is not expected to favor it.
