The Michigan Supreme Court Thursday werturned John A. Sinclair's conviction for ossession of marijuana, and in doing so, declared the present statutes classifying rass a narcotic are unconstitutional.

The court also overturned the conviction Eric Lorentzen for sale of marijuana, uling that the sentence for sale of marijuana, uling that the sentence for sale of marijuana "as" cruel and unusual."

The court's decision, in effect, voids that ection of the law dealing with marijuana ossession. Chief Justice Thomas M. (avanaugh said that persons possessing ections are control to the prosecuted until the parijuana cannot be prosecuted until the rug reform law takes effect April 1.

"I would say that as far as prosecution for ession of marijuana is concerned."

Kavanaugh said, "under this present statute, there would be no means to prosecute."

The penalty for marijuana possession will be reduced to a misdemeanor carrying a maximum one-year sentence under the law due to take effect April 1.

Kavanaugh stated that the decision did not affect the prosecution for sale of marijuana, only possession. Kavanaugh did admit, however, that under present laws, the possession of marijuana is legal.

When asked specifically if a prosecutor could prosecute for possession of marijuana between now and April 1, he said, "I would assume no."

Some doubts were immediately raised, however, about Kavanaugh's interpretation of the decision. The confusion stems from a section of the opinion written by Justice John B. Swainson.

Chief Justice Kavanaugh and Justices G. Mennen Williams, and Thomas Giles Kavanaugh, that the marijuana statutes were unconstitutional, Swainson asserted that present statutes provide for presecution for marijuana possession.

"The decision today doesn't mean that persons arrested for sale or possession of marijuana cannot be prosecuted," Swainson said. Swainson said a section of the law dealing with hallucinogenic drugs such as LSD, mescaline, and peyote could be applied to cases between the time of the ruling and April 1.

Solicitor General Robert A. Derengoski said that, though it is "very questionable" whether a person caught for marijuana possession could be prosecuted, Swainson's

In his opinion, though concurring with opinion left a loophole that some prosecutors might attempt to use.

> In the Sinclair case, the court voted 4-2 to discharge the Ann Arbor radical, who is presently free on bond. The dissenters, Justices Thomas E. Brennan and Paul L. Adams, though agreeing that Sinclair's nine to ten - year sentence for possession of one marijuana cigaret constituted "cruel and unusual punishment," said that Sinclair should be resentenced.

> The justices held that the present marijuana statutes violated either the equal protection clause of the constitution or the invasion of privacy clause. All six justices agreed that Sinclair's sentence was "cruel and unusual."

Chicago hawk disrupts peace, eludes capture

HIGHLAND PARK, Ill. (AP)—An elusive red-tailed hawk that has been swooping from trees and snatching hats has divided this community on Chicago's North Shore.

Police and some residents, fearful of children being injured, want the bird destroyed. Other residents, who have fed the predator from their back doorsteps, protest the death penalty. No injuries have been reported.

Michael Lichtwalt, animal warden of Highland Park, said attempts to capture the hawk have been futile and there may be no choice but to shoot the bird.

"He's too smart for traps," Lichtwalt said. "Evidently, he's been caught before. He stays away from them. Even to shoot him might be difficult. He flies a wide and extensive range, usually hitting the same spots, but his times vary."

Lichtwalt said he's one of several persons victimized by the bird during the representative of the state NAACP written a letter to President Wharton the board of trustees charging that SU is violating Dept. of Health, ducation and Welfare (HEW) quirements for equal opportunity in

The letter from Stuart J. Robert Perrin, vice president for hiversity relations, acknowledged receipt the letter Thursday and said it would be ought to the attention of the trustees.

"We would caution, however, that he (Dunnings) and other not make premature judgments or erroneously infer a relationship between the letter from the four trustees regarding the proposed College of Urban Development and MSU's commitment to affirmative action for minorities," Perrin said.

He invited Dunnings to review MSU's "achievements" in the area of minority hiring with the office of Equal Opportunity Programs (EOP).

Dunnings said the four trustees raised the issue of a "black college" and this prompted him to investigate the racial composition of the Center for Urban Affairs (CUA) and other MSU departments as well as enrollments in minority - related

The word impecunious throws back to a statement by the four trustees that blacks constitute an of Michigan's population.

Dunnings said his information "suggests that the probleem is not that the Center for Urban Affairs or the proposed college will be all black, but the problem really lies in the fact that the bulk of the University is white."

The letter asks "how can MSU justify its racially restrictive staffs in view of the large amounts of federal dollars that it receives through every existing MSU college?"

"We are greatly concerned that MSU continues to recieve federal funds while it is not only reneging on its commitments to the solving of urban problems, but is also atttempting to silence academicians and programs that are responsive to the needs of urban communities," the letter continued.

Deputy dies in gun battle

DETROIT (AP)-A Wayne County sheriff's deputy was killed and three deputies were wounded Thursday by Detroit police officers in what officials described as a tragic case of mistaken identity.

The shootings came after three cruising police officers broke in on five off-duty deputies and a civilian playing cards in a second - floor apartment on Detroit's West

The civilian, Richard Sain, 32, who lives in another building, said an unidentified man shouted through the open door, "Police!" and started firing.

"Bullets came from everywhere," Sain said in an interview while being questioned at police headquarters. "We ran into the bedroom. . . We kept calling out 'sheriff's deputies, sheriff's deputies."

The officers, kept on firing, however, Sain said, adding that when the shooting stopped, the officers ordered everyone out of the bedroom.

"Then they began beating everybody," he (Please turn to page 13)

Here is what Hume told the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is re-examining the nomination of Richard G. Kleindienst to succeed Mitchell as attorney general:

"He (Mitchell) said at the party in Kentucky he had received a call or had been contacted by the President to lay off ITT."

"You mean this is what the President said?" Hume said he asked Ms. Beard, who is now hospitalized with a serious heart ailment in Denver.

In answer to that, Hume said Ms. Beard softened the President's intent to mean that Nixon wanted Mitchell "to make a reasonable settlement."

Former Republican Kentucky Gov. Louis Nunn, who was host at the Derbyreception, told the committee Tuesday that Ms. Beard collapsed in a stupor during the reception.

Europe: dollar plunges

The U.S. dollar plunged sharply in hectic trading on European currency markets Thursday in London in one of its worst days since devaluation last December.

The dollar recovered only part of its losses in late trading after hitting new lows in London, Frankfurt, Zurich and Paris.

Fearing a weakening American currency, speculators nervously sold millions of dollars as part of general uncertainty over the dollar despite last December's world money agreement.

Forces capable of defense

The military forces of Nationalist China are, by most estimates, well able to defend Taiwan despite cuts in aid from the United States.

The subject has been raised in Taiwan because President Nixon in his communique with Premier Chou En-lai of Communist China announced that U.S. forces ultimately would be withdrawn from Taiwan.

The Oregon law says that Myers must list the names of those generally advocated or recognized by the national news media.

City probes cable TV drafts

By BILL WHITING State News Staff Writer

Now that East Lansing is finally getting things together in straightening out the controversy over the role of cable television in the community, the state legislature is beginning to take a look into it.

Local officials say they are happy the state is fainally getting its feet dirty, even though it comes a little late to help East Lansing wiggle its way out of the quagmire.

The city council has been sifting through mountainous piles of information on cable TV ever since a public hearing on the issue last November. Beleagured City Attorney Daniel C. Learned and his staff have prepared at least three drafts of proposed city ordinances and will undoubtedly have to put out at least one more. Learned's staff and City Manager John Patriarch have become pseudo-experts on the topic, along with several councilmen who have jumped into the battle. This is one of the first communities in the country to take such an extensive look into the possibilities of cable service, and the resulting ordinance is expected to be a guideline for others around the country.

The vast implications of a city ordinance governing this service were really brought into the light through the efforts of a group of residents calling themselves the Community Cable Television Coalition. Their pressure and interest served to inspire the city council to press for a more refined local ordinance than was originally planned.

"The ordinance, not the franchise agreement, should be the law," they stated in their presentation in November. It is this premise that has been the guiding force of changing local schools of though which have been somewhat at odds in drawing up the proposed ordinances. One, that as much as possible be included in the ordinance, rather than the franchise agreement with the individual company. And the other, that the ordinance be left fairly flexible with major points to be left for the company agreement.

Patriarche said recently this is one of two

Patriarche indicated that city attorneys favor the flexible approach, but most of the public input has leaned the other way. He pointed out than an ordinance is more difficult to change and that either course would have to stand the test of public scrutiny.

The coalition position, however, argues that the franchise approach would "settle by negotiation and probably improvisation too many important provisions which should be determined by thorough study and published as laws binding on the franchise agreement."

As it stands, the recent third draft of the proposed ordinance, which numbers 18 single-spaced typewritter pages, does not leave a great deal to negotiate.

"There aren't any ordinances like this that I've seen," Patriarche said. "It's very technical and a lot of time and money has gone into it." The council had to authorize an additional appropriation to the legal fund last week, in order for services to continue.

The controls which the coalition and some councilmen hope to include in the ordinance almost make the cable service a public utility, with a number of safeguards to keep the facilities open to a staggering array of public use. Although there is an almost endless array of services which are technically feasible, Patriarche is quick to point out that practical consideration and high costs will probably prohibit Michigan registered voters some of the more grandiose designs for the

The proposed ordinance does provide for an extensive use of studio facilities and public channels which will be stipulated in any agreement with a company, which will be given a franchise for an area for 10 years. A city commission would be established to oversee the company's operations and settle any disputes which may arise among groups or individuals who wish to use the facilities to broadcast programs to the community.

The ordinance stipulates that 20 per cent of the channels available shall be dedicated for public access, and another 20 per cent for use by public agencies.

Patriarche said that when service is instituted. the cable will be capable of offering 26 channels for broadcast. As technology improves, the number could greatly increase. The company must provide access to at least one studio for local groups interested in making their own programs. Schools and local government could make use of the channels to broadcast meetings, special events, and other public-oriented programs.

Plans call for the company to use existing lines where possible in hooking up dwellings to the system. Special provisions are made to protect the community if it should become necessary for the lines to be removed.

Patriarche said that the real importance of the ordinance lies in providing more meaningful communications system for the community.

"There is a feeling among some people that there are not enough facilities at the present time to communicate with others," he said. "It gives an outlet to somebody to broadcast."

The city manager pointed out that it was unlikely that the city would make much money off the franchise fees, since 20 per cent of that will be returned to development of the facilities.

Several officials estimate it will be another six months before the ordinance is finally completed and in effect. In the meantime, the state legislature is considering one bill which would drop a moratorium on all cable negotiations.

Nixon vows action against bomb plots

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon, decrying "vicious extortion plots" against the nation's airlines, pledged Thursday that the federal government will mobilize all resources "until the current threat is crushed."

In a statement, Nixon ordered the immediate implementation of pending moves aimed at keeping dangerous persons and devices off the country's scheduled airliners.

The President was moved to act because of what he termed "a new threat" to air transport as evidenced in an attempt to blackmail Trans World Airlines into paying a $2 million ransom to keep bombs off its planes.

One bomb was discovered Tuesday, before it exploded, at Kennedy International Airport in New York and another ripped through the cockpit of an empty TWA jetliner in Las Vegas, Nev. early Wednesday.

Adding to concern about the safety of air travel in a period of high-flying ransom efforts, still a third "device" was found aboard a United Airlines plane Wednesday in Seattle.

Nixon directed "immediate steps by every carrier to prevent or deter carriage of weapons or explosives aboard its aircraft, to prevent or deter unauthorized access to its aircraft; to tighten its baggage check-in procedures; and to improve the security of its cargo and baggage loading operations."

Under proposed security regulations the airlines would have been permitted 90 days in which to carry out the measures.

Their reasons for starting the drive vary, but were perhaps best expressed by Ms. Chamberlain, who said, "The war issue has pretty much calmed down, but we do not intend to support it, but we do want to support the guys so we thought this might be the best way."

While at the Capitol the three RAswere able to get the support of a few senators who indicated they would contribute, but they were unable to find any representatives early in the day.

Gov. Milliken promised to send them a check, and wished them luck.

Rep. John M. Engler R-Mount Pleasant championed their efforts and submitted a resolution to the House of Representatives commending them for their efforts.

Ms. Mills said the Red Cross will notify each of the GIs that they are to make the call and those receiving them will have been notified to be at home on Easter Day.

EDITORIALS The ASMSU failure: let's get 'em this time

Thursday the State News planned to run an editorial headlined "Don't crush that levy; hand me a new board." In the editorial the State News editors argued the student body. would do best to vote "no" on the proposal to abolish the 50 per cent per term ASMSU student tax and "yes" on the proposal to draft a new ASMSU constitution which would completely reorganize student government.

However, late Wednesday night at press the State News had to pull this editorial because the student board had once again failed to assemble a quorum. Since the board had no quorum, it could not appoint new members to the election commission, short four members of the number required. Without an elections commission, no election could be held Thursday.

The problem for the State News was short-lived - we simply printed Friday's editorials a day early. The student body is not so fortunate. The student government problem has become even more chronic than ever if such a thing is possible.

With a referendum critical to the

E.L. registrars

Anyone wishing to act as an East Lansing deputy voting registrar at next week's class registration must register at City Hall by 2 p.m. today, and attend the training session given at that time. The only requirement for this position is that you be a registered voter of the City of East Lansing.  students of this University at hand, our lackluster representatives did not feel enough responsibility to their constituencies to bother attending to their elective chores.

It is just this sort of ineffectual behavior that has been the cause of the petition to repeal the ASMSU tax'.

There is not good reason why Kevin Harty, Richard Vanderveen, Sherry Lessen, Larry Stemple, C.K. Hunt, Steve Landrum and Jim Felton could not attend Wednesday's board meeting. They were not laid up in Olin. Most had never experienced problems attending end of the term board meetings in the past.

In fact, many of the above-mentioned board members expressly informed ASMSU chairman Hal Buckner that they had no intention of attending any meeting this week. The motivation for most is clear: to delay, or if possible, kill the referendum to revamp the student board by parlimentary chicanery.

By so doing they have provided one of the stringest arguments for that very referendum. The proposed new constitution needs to be passed as soon as possible so that student government can be wiped clean of the present corrupt, self-serving district representation system.

Since, however, it appears that the people may have to seize democracy if they are to have it at all, a constructive first step might involve the recall of all student board retromingents who failed to attend Wednesday's meeting.

POINT OF VIEW

Racism: let's get the facts first

By S. GEORGE FIELD

East Lansing graduate student It seems apparent that racial feelings, tensions, and angers are indeed reaching the boiling point of possible physical violence on this campus. From general observation, the crux of the recent flareups seems to be a question of justice or justification. Many whites seem to feel that black demands and tactics are not just. The issues have varied: athletic status, admissions, financial aid, and such terms as racist all but seem to revolve around the issue of justice.

From my point of view, the unfortunate quality of the various arguments is that many pertinent facts are not known. In order to make a personal decision of quality and merit it would seem appropriate that all factors influencing the decision be known and shared. In the Behagen, Taylor affair this has not been done. The general public was treated to various film reports of Ohio State player Luke Witte being assaulted apparently without provocation.

Was there no provocation? The Big Ten has yet to answer. How have other incidents of violence been handled in the Big Ten and elsewhere? As far as I am aware, a hockey player has to sit out only the next game if involved in a serious fight. Fights in football seem to result in either a no penalty, 15 yard penalty, or expulsion from the game call. What has happened at other universities where players have been involved in basketball brawls? (say the University of South Carolina vs. Maryland and Marquette). Was the decision based upon the severity of injury? Did the decision take into account the effect of the penalty upon the careers of those suspended? In short, what were the factors of this decision so that the justice of it can be appraised?

In other areas (financial aid, admission) I have heard many whites complain of supposed policies that are including blacks to the neglect or exclusion of whites. Again, it would seem that a full disclosure of policies and procedures might add to the decision-making process. What are the various criteria for loans, fellowships, and scholarships? If disadvantaged whites are not being admitted, or are not receiving parity in financial aid, where are the committed white administrators, professors, and students who are complaining of these and other claimed injustices? Is their position one of excluding blacks from these educational opportunities or of including whites? Let us hear from admissions, financial aid, and the various aid granting departments.

"Racist" is a word that evokes many varied feelings and reactions. Fear, anger, guilt, and self-satisfaction indicates some of the range of feeling that this word provokes. I have understood that racist meant the systematic exclusion of another or others based upon race (with the label being equally applicable to individuals as well as institutions). The word "racist" seems to have lost validity in many minds.

Apparently blacks and whites are not always sure how the word "racist" is being used by the other, or don't want to believe and face the implications of the above definition. Often whites ascribe the label "racist" to be a tool of power used by various racial groups to intimidate when their position is not agreed with or supported. Races of color seem to take the position that whites are inherently racist and cannot, because of their lack of experience, know or understand the subleties or implications of race.

I am not sure how either feeling helps people come closer together. I get a vision of two people shouting and throwing stones at each other from opposite ends of a room; the one claiming that the other can no know or understand while his opposite taunts him with shouts of "garbage, garbage."

Somehow rather than examining the feeling of themselves and each other, the two are able to stand apart glaring and hating Perhaps this is the design of some, but I fee that there are others who strongly wish to deal with each other in a positive fashion, I would seem that a more fruitful dialogue might be affected if both parties were clear about their feelings, meanings and intentions. Certainly there are going to b differences, but differences need not b settled with the notion that might make

In summary, I feel that the resolution of various racial conflicts and tensions on thi campus are often not being resolved because of : inadequate information, the use of broad generalized statements and concept as universals, and the lack of emotional ris taking through a mutual sharing of ideas an feelings. If we don't explore together, takin into account our racial, cultural, and experiential differences and similarities then we may indeed be left with a situation

"there may not be any solution short o emotional, physical, nonproductive confrontation." State News Mike Fo March 2, 1972.

A PRESIDENT'S PERSPECTIVE Status of 'U' women, volunteers, new veep

By CLIFTON WHARTON

You and the members of the board of trustees listened for more than six hours to women expressing their views on the status of women at MSU. What happens next?

On the whole, I believe the open hearing was very constructive. A great many recommendations were offered, and these are being studied by the Office of Equal Opportunity Programs or other appropriate offices. A number of the recommendations parallel items which we already have had under consideration. I am hopeful that in the near future, we will be able to our intentions to take affirmative action in several areas which should be of benefit to women.

Some steps have already been taken. For example, it was not given much public attention, but the administration recommended and the board approved at its February meeting a far - reaching new sickness and disability leave policy which covers incapacity due to pregnancy for the first time. only education answer

Funding at state level

Throughout the past years, the balance of quality education has leaned dicidedly toward the rich, while the poor have suffered in comparison. This sad situation has mainly been created by the regressive nature of the property tax, the means by which public schools are supported. Those persons living in high - value property areas can pay for better schools and teachers than those persons living in underprivileged areas.

This probelm may soon be remedied. The President's Commission on School Finance has recommended the major fiscal burden for education be placed in the hands of the individual states. Each state, under this system, would collect funds and distribute them equally throughout each school district. This would greatly reduce the present discrepencies among school districts.

Without question, the states will need some incentive to take over the burdensome task of financial distribution. The commission has recommended that the federal government should offer between $4.6 billion and $7.8 billion over the next five years to provide that Already many state supreme courts have ruled the property tax unconstitutional as a means of financing education. If continued pressure is applied to the property tax at the local, state and federal levels, the dream of equal education for all can one day be realized.

An end to the abuses?

The all-too-common "top secret" stamp, which has been used by too many bureaucrats much too indiscriminately, will now be seen on fewer documents. President Nixon has ordered that "the many abuses of the security system" be ended.

Nixon's executive order includes such measures as reducing the number of officials who can classify material as secret and automatic timetables for downgrading and eventually declassifying "all secret documents except the most sensitive."

This directive is a definite step in the right direction. It is regretabble, however, that this unfortunate situation of excessive secrecy is only now being remedied. For exampe, had the Pentagon Papers been available to the public, they would not have created a vast wave of doubt in the credibility of government officials.

Granted, on rare occasions there may be issues which must be concealed for national security reasons. But these situations are few and far between. In all other instances, the public must be allowed to know what is going on in their country's decision-making process.

In my campaign for city council last year, my main concern was to foster a greater involvement in city affairs by the citizens of East Lansing. I stressed the fact that only one - quarter of the city's eligible population was registered to vote and that perhaps a third of those registered had voted previously in local elections. In particular, I urged the young people of the city - who constitute a majority of the population in East Lansing - to participate in the governance of their city by registering, voting and remaining interested throughout the year in what was happening at city hall.

With the help of other candidates who felt much like I did, and hundreds of city residents who joined organizations such as Project: City Hall, the Coalition for Human Survival and VOTER, interest and concern about local government was created.

The result of the campaign was a huge increase in the electorate and a corresponding increase in the number of voters who participated in the city council

The election results also helped create a new understanding at city hall about the attitudes of young voters. These new voters had said clearly at the pools that they wanted to become involved in the city where they spend the great majority of their time, where they pay taxes, where they are counted by the census, where they spend the bulk of their money.

East Lansing has benefitted a great many ways over the years by the presence of young people in the community. However, the city had never before seen the talent and energy of young people involved in the political process.

The city has responded to the clear message of the election by adopting voter registration procedures which could make it possible to vastly increase the electorate again. The big difference between last year's drive and this year's is that the new procedures should eliminate the hassles that sometimes enveloped registration drive sponsors and the city clerk.

In fact, those of us who participated in the voter registration drives in 1971 still find it difficult to believe that the new procedures actually exist. Clearly, they do, and the implications of their existence are pointed: The city has responded in good faith to public pressure exerted at the polling place; now the pressure is on residents to show they really are interested enough in the political process to take advantage of the new procedures.

To sum up these procedures as adopted unanimously by city council on Feb. 7: 1. Door - to - door canvassing by volunteer deputy registrars is now allowed. 2. Any registered citizen of the city can become a deputy registrar by applying and then completing a short training session at city hall. 3. Special registration sites or programs will be allowed following application to the city clerk.

4. Permanent voter registration centers can be established and staffed by volunteer deputy registrars at locations throughout the city (in the public schools, business district or in dormitories).

The obvious key to success for such a progressive voter registration policy is the involvement of residents in the deputy registrar program.

If residents participate in the program, East Lansing will be singled out as a city where participatory democracy has actually happened. If they do not, it will be yet another distressing example of citizens failing to control their own

I'VE GOT A TOUGH ONE FOR

DOONESBURY

Rent-a-thesis: wrong solution

Your editorial of March 7 (Rent - A - Thesis Ripoffs: Bleeding the University) attacks a serious problem the wrong way. If the Michigan Legislature outlawed the sale of term papers, the probable result would not be to end the practice but to increase the business of term paper writing firms. The argument for outlawing rests on the unexamined assumption and popular myth that the criminal law is automatically and fully effective. You have fallen prey to the typical reaction of persons who are faced with a social - moral problem but don't have the imagination and energy to solve it: "They ought to pass a law ....

We have seen, in the United States, the failure of the criminal sanction to control the sale and use of alcoholic beverages. The disastrous attempt to prohibit booze through a constitutional amendment not only failed, but stimulated criminal activity among ordinary citizens and created a situation where organized crime could grow. We have not learned the real lesson of prohibition. Criminal laws do not stop the use of hard drugs such as heroin - they only create an economic situation where illegal antimarijuana laws is quite evident on this campus. Laws have virtually no effect on the incidents of gambling or prostitution. To think that a criminal law would control or end a service crime such as term paper selling is fatuous. Another unexamined assumption in your editorial is that the

harm to students and society from the sale of term papers is large and absolute. I cannot seriously accept the proposition that cheating on one occasion automatically means that a student will ultimately and surely become an incompetent professional. If it were true, then the argument for immediate and crushing sanctions against term paper sellers would be called for. But for a potential and tenuous public harm, more moderate methods of control are needed. As for the magnitude of the problem, this University and many others grant degrees to many who do not deserve them. Low quality or mediocre mass education is surely a problem of higher priority than term papers for sale.

Your editorial states: "Presently the University lacks the means to combat this erosion of the academic process." This is false. The University has not seriously attempted to combat termpaper - for - sale businesses. Undoubtedly, it would be desirable for the administration to shirk this problem and pass the dirty job of control onto the police and courts. This would be ineffective but it would create a moralistic facade that something is being done. I have no doubts that innovative and relatively inexpensive means of cutting down the use of commercial term papers could be devised. Merely because they are legal does not give such firms or their customers the right to conduct their business unobserved. Civil sanctions and controls could check and even strangle such business.

There is another side to this problem. While most term paper sellers and users are just simply dishonest, this business does reflect a problem in the University. If we are willing to look for the underlying causes of burglary and marijuana use, we should also examine the underlying causes of commercial academic dishonesty. Even dishonesty has its uses if it forces the community to take a hard look at its own improper practices. What I fear is that the morally satisfying attack on the high visibility term paper business will be used by the legislature and University, wittingly or unwittingly, as a smoke screen to avoid dealing with more serious and harder - to - solve problems of mass education.

It is becoming common knowledge that many criminal laws do not serve the public at large but rather serve narrow interest groups. Term papers for sale are only a nuisance to the general public. The interest groups most directly involved are University teachers and students. Commercial term papers are forcing teachers to modify their customary forms of instruction and evaluation. Teachers do not like this any more than business interests like serious competition or pilferage. Neither antitrust laws nor larceny statutes have solved either of these problems; and ultimately, it is the consumer who pays.

Lest it be thought that I am an apologist for commercial term paper firms, I should say that I favor vigorous University action to curb or eradicate this form of cheating. Also, this kind of cheating is so blatant that I feel a student using such services should be expelled from the University. My point is that the action called for by your editorial would be like throwing oil on a fire instead of water.

Marvin Zalman Asst. Professor of criminal justice March 8, 1972.

Tune stereos down

There have been great strides forward in recent years to make our society ecologically aware and active. At the same time, the University has granted student demands for fewer controls upon their lifestyles and dormitory living. These two changes have presented themselves in a paradoxical situation relative to dorm

First, the lack of constraints on personal behavior has led to the belief that one's lifestyle supercedes the rights of other students. Many students therefore have lost their right to study and sleep when they choose because of those persons who feel that their rights include playing a television or stereo loudly with the door wide open at any hour of the day. The lack of respect for other persons is appalling. Speaking secondly about a related ecological issue, these same students feel they are entitled to pollute me with their noise. Noise pollution, as one of the lesser concerns of most people, is normally overlooked in the crowded dormitory situation. Many of the avowedly concerned students who recycle their newspapers and complain about weak ecology laws are among those who blast everyone around them with expensive stereo systems. This is a rather fundamental inconsistency, but, of course, noise is not exactly an "in" ecology topic either. This may sound rather humorous to many readers, but I feel it shows a legitimate inconsistency between the works and actions

Editor's note: Given the complexity of academic advising problem and the range of views on it, the State News no pretense at knowing the answer the problem. However, it should be that a problem does exist which ds careful attention.

proposal which drops the requirement that the student take 45 credits solely from University College, will definitely cause an increased flexibility in the academic

With the realization that the general education plan will put an additional burden on the already limping academic advising system, the Educational Policies Committee of the Academic Council formed a subcommittee to study the situation. The subcommittee was instructed to "evaluate current undergraduate academic advising and recommend modifications for its improvement.

Harold Johnson, chairman of the subcommittee, said that though it would be premature to make a statement about the subcommittee's recommendations, the report should point out the areas where the student raises certain questions and where he's gotten the "bum's rush."

"The problem is so complex that many needs of the student are not being met,' Johnson said.

Johnson said that through the interviews the subcommittee has found instances where graduate students are favored by advisers over the undergraduate students. In some cases the graduate students are being given more attention by the advisers at the expense of the undergraduate students, Johnson said.

"If the University has a commitment to advising," Johnson said. "The heart of undergraduate education lies in the advising.'

undergraduate education it must make a commitment to the undergraduate

Johnson said that some of the colleges and departments are doing as well as they can with what they have but some just do not have all the facilities they need to provide good advising.

He cited specifically the interdisciplinary programs which are strained because their staff has to share their time and efforts between the interdisciplinary programs and their home departments.

The more open curricula with a large number of electives must give the student an opportunity to analyze the electives and discuss the alternative courses with a qualified adviser, Johnson said.

"If you have a rigid curriculum, that in itself is an advising system," Johnson said. Johnson also said that the rising number of community colleges in the state suggests that MSU will be getting more transfer studnets who have different advising problems than students who start at MSU in their freshman year.

"There will have to be a shift of the emphasis of advising system to accomodate the mix of the new student population," Johnson said.

Johnson also said that there is a question as to how good advising is rewarded.

"Faculty are promoted because of their publication or teaching ability but no one is ever promoted because he is a good adviser," Johnson said. "Advising is just the quiet thing that goes on on the side and people really don't know about it."

Johnson said that he would personally support the establishment of a central coordinating office for advising. The coordinator would not act in an administrative capacity, but as a guiding force to be alert to the needs of the studnets.

"Each unit, be it department or college, has its own needs, so I don't suggest a centralization to dictate to the units," he said. "The problem is a lack of communication between units."

Johnson suggested a more economical way of advising so that the work of the various units are not overlapping.

"We really need to act and not just talk," he said.

Since it was formed in October the subcommittee has interviewed representatives from seven colleges and three or four departments in each of those colleges. They have also interviewed the old and new directors of the advising staff for the Summer Orientation program, the Ombudsman and representatives from, the counseling center, supportive services and the Placement Bureau.

A report on the subcommittee's findings and recommendations is due at the end of spring term.

The subcommittee is evaluating the colleges and departments with respect to their general advising structure, their advisory staff, the information on procedures, requirements and options made available to students, the number of student generally involved in the system and the identifiable problem areas.

The committee has finished interviews with the departments and colleges. Interviews with selected faculty and students still remain.

Though the subcommittee has not drafted its report, Harold Johnson, chairman of the subcommittee, said that the report will reveal areas where a more detailed analysis is needed.

"When we are finished with the evaluation we'll know enough about the system to ask the right questions,"

> Because of the diversified systems of academic advising, there is little consistency from college to college at MSU.

John Winburne, University College asst. dean for student affairs, said that the centralized system of using full-time academic advisers can increase the consistency, however.

He said that a centralized advising staff has several advantages over the faculty or graduate adviser systems.

"A faculty member has his hands full keeping up with his own department and his own field," said Winburne. "They can't keep up with new courses and changes and do all the other things they're expected to do."

He added that a graduate student is usually most interested in his graduate work rather than academic advising. "And as soon as he gets aquainted with the University he'll be leaving," said

He said that during the course of helping students in career planning, counselors often come close to program planning, but prefer not to take any official actions. Of the students who come for aid in career planning, Rowland said, "approximately half come with career planning as only thier presenting problem. For a great many, the real concerns are deeper than career planning."

But for the students whose underlying problem is confusion in the future career decision, the Counseling Center maintains a well - stocked and up - to - date occupational information library. Rowland said there is career information in the library for most careers a college graduate could be interested in pursuing. "Our occupational library is a fairly complete and up to - date collection of career information and requirements for opportunities in the kinds of jobs college students are likely to be interested in," Rowland said. He added that the library has been used extensively, especially in the past year as a result of the job shortage. As an additional service, the counseling center is able to refer students to appropriate academic departments for more information in the curricula in a specific major.

The center is also equipped to give students vocational testing and help them interpret the results.

If the student comes into the center with a problem in planning a career, he may be placed on a waiting list which grows bigger as the academic year progresses. Rowland emphasized, however, that students with urgent problems need not think they will be required to wait before being assigned a counselor.

Students who visit the Counseling Center often come at the suggestion of an academic adviser, though the center is operated solely on a voluntary basis.

Legislatures moving slowly on no fault

By BETHANN MASALKOSKI State News Staff Writer

No fault has been described as an idea whose time has come and seen as a revolution in the automobile insurance field.

The public has been telling their unions, their legislators, their insurance companies, their lawyers and anyone else who will listen that "something has to be done" about insurance.

"Something has to be done to make insurance do a better job of paying the cost of auto injuries.

"Something has to be done to make sure the right kind of insurance is available to every car owner and at a fair price."

Resourceful' coed finds gold By ROBERT BAO

State News Staff Writer

While hunting for Indian relics in the Mojave Desert last week, an MSU student stumbled on a gold mine that might contain up to $5 million worth of precious metals.

Carol Forche, Farmington senior, and an archeologist who asked not to be identified, made the discovery after overcoming a four day ordeal caused by the breakdown of their Volvo midway in the trek.

"Wow! I'm really excited," she said shortly after returning to campus Monday. "An assaying firm in Las Vegas valued a small sample from the mine at more than $400." Although goldmining tends to be unprofitable in the U.S., Ms. Forche intends to extract as much ore as possible. "We've filed a claim on the mine," she explained. "We'll work on it for three years, until the claim comes up for review." Her discovery, however, anticlimaxed a desperate life struggle that unfolded like a suspense drama, with Gila monsters, rattlesnakes and vultures providing all the

Looking happy but exhausted, her skin darkened by the Nevada sun, the blonde coed described her saga in the Mojave to a group of bewildered friends.

"It all began when we found some Indian petroglyphs near the California border," she recounted. "My friend said they were at least 10,000 years old."

Fascinated by the find, they drove deeper and deeper into the desert along a hilly, tire rutted road that curved through Joshua trees until suddenly, the car sputtered to a halt the transmission had broken down.

"I really panicked at first," she recalled. "We had 50 gallons of water, very little food, and the nearest town, Ivanpah, Calif. (population 3), was at least 30 miles away."

For four days, the duo traveled with one atop the engine, operating the gear shift manually, and the other steering the car. The advanced in spurts, succumbing intermittently to the desert heat.

"I eventually realized that death was OK. I think I breathed the spirit of Indians - which for centuries has infused the desert air - and realized that there was ample room for me if I

"It's nothing like civilization," she noted, "where your soul gets lost in a traffic jam."

Gradually, they conquered the basic hostility of the wilderness with a machete and a pistol, relying on jack rabbits for food and cacti for water. As they plodded onward towards Ivanpah, they discovered the gold.

"We saw these rocks that looked like white quartz with golden veins," she said. "We knew it had to be gold, so we immediately built a circle of rocks there as our claim."

Shortly afterwards, they reached Ivanpah. Ms. Forche would not reveal the exact location

"It's near the base of a small mountain ridge close to the California - Nevada border, about 150 miles southwest of Las Vegas," she

John Sokoll, special agent of the U.S. Secret Service, said in a phone interview that under present federal laws, any gold found in a natural state may be sold for profit.

The Mojave Desert is under federal control, but the majority of the land is designated as "open" to prospectors.

Ms. Forche, who writes poetry, indicated that she will use the gold in philanthropic donate my share to artists," she pledged, "who don't have the freedom to do what they want."

Ms. Forche added that after some rest, she will write an article about her experience, which might also inspire some poetry.

"It was just a fantastic experience," she reflected. "You know, I learnt more in four desert days than in four MSU years."

through a strenuous hour of exercise in which participants are asked to perform minor miarcles like touching the top of their head with their foot. Exercise is finished out with some meditation.

The group is then paired off so that the more experienced are working with those in their beginning stages.

Members with brown belts roam the room, checking technique. Almost an hour of technique transpires before Max breaks up the instruction.

The group is arranged in a circle and sparring begins. Two students exhibit their skills inside the circle. Blows and kicks are pulled short so that no one is hurt.

"We're not out here to hurt anyone," Gordon makes clear. "It's the technique that's important." After the sparring and some final meditation, Gordon was able to talk about the club. The Third World Karate Club has been in existence since October 1971, when it was started with six members. "I had gotten a lot of complaints that the MSU Karate Club was too large and impersonal. Many students don't get the attention they need," Gordon explained. "There are also many who cannot afford to take karate as a class, blacks in particular. We try to accommodate everyone by giving students the attention and charging nothing."

Gordon paid tribute to Clifford Price, a black belt that also had a hand in forming the club.

"I guess we all do it because we like to work with young people," Gordon added. "Karate instills self - control and self confidence — the self confidence to ignore a threat and pass up a fight. With background in karate you are much more reluctant to indulge in violence because of the possibility of killing or maiming someone."

Gordon went on to say the group was close - knit. "They're learning together, teaching each other," he explained. "Karate doesn't unify us, we hang with each other after the sessions. It's a communal type thing, a feeling that is sometimes missing in other karate clubs.

MSU festival reveals quality local films down to an evening of beer and TV, only to discover that the deserve mention - Lowell Zurbuck's "Poor Scholar's Soliloquy"

By JIM YOUSLING

The short film has always had trouble finding its proper showcase - too minor for the big theaters to bother with, too wierd for TV - but it nonetheless provides an excellent training ground for filmmakers. The Genesis series has helped, but there are undoubtedly thousands of excellent films that will simply never be seen by mass audiences.

If you need proof, you should have attended The Third Coming last weekend. Sponsored by the MSU Broadcasters Film Committee, this was the third annual contest for locally produced 16mm films, and their quality might surprise you. Of the 14 films shown, there wasn't an out - and - out bad film among them (well, maybe one), and, speaking as one of the judges, I must admit that I had a horrible time trying to select the

Not too surprisingly, the top judges award ($100) and the audience award ($25) both went to "From Dusk," Bergmanesque allegory of life and death by Jack Epps Jr., Birmingham senior, and Jeff Jackson, Battle Creek junior. The symbolism is too self conscious for comfort, but the photography is outstanding, and, considering that the film was 20 minutes long (about four times the length of most of the other entries), it was a pretty impressive production.

Second prize ($50) went to Anderson House, East Lansing graduate student, for "How You Make It Long," and excellent attack on Madison Avenue's sneaky methods of selling everything with sex. Mostly, the film shows young people selecting clothes and explaining why they buy what they do. A simple idea, but one which I've never seen pulled off so well - rather in the style of "The Great American Dream Machine."

Third prize ($25) was awarded to "Manipulation," a clever little horror film by Craig Reinertson, Reston, Va. senior and Roy Edmonds, East Lansing graduate student. In the film, a man sits tube will only show a picture of him. The horror starts when the TV man begins to control the "real" man. It isn't as slick technically as it might be, but the script and Johnny Lansky's performance make up for it.

It's a pity that there wasn't a fourth or fifth prize, because the overall quality was so high. Two near - excellent documentaries and "Portrait of a Free School" by Hal Stimson, East Lansing graduate student, and Joel Bilitzke Okemos junior.

I was also very fond of Ken Beckman, Brookings, S.D., junior's "Dance," a beautiful series of multicolored superimpositions which unfortunately was less interesting when it went almost totally abstract near the end. Tom Campbell's "Title" was little more than an illustrated record (something I normally res

The first time I saw "Straw Dogs" I was paralyzed. I had, under the stark control of director Sam Peckinpah, been turned into a bowl of sweaty wet Jello. I walked out of the heater expecting some one to leap out from behind a parked car and strike me dead. That was when I saw the film in December before word was out, before it became overrated as a thriller, and especially before the ending had been violated by word of mouth with reports of excessive violence.

Back in December a simple film had begun to unroll before my eyes. Dustin Hoffman was playing David the meek mathematician escaping from all forms of commitment and Susan George was playing Amy, the luscious tantalizing child wife of David. I was watching the emasculated male cower before the virile English men when out of nowhere came action, violence, and excitement that was totally unexpected. It left me limp, exhausted. I felt as if I had fought as hard as David and we'd won together.

the ending any more than the ficitional character on the screen had. And in turn the film fully succeeded in what it was trying to do - to shake my orderly little world.

I decided to go see "Straw Dogs" again before writing about it. The second time through my impressions were totally different. I found the dialog hollow and uninvolving. Peckinpah's 90 - minute character and conflict development was lifeless and tedious when compared to something like "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf" which used all the elements to its best ability without depending on one to off guard. the beginning. "Straw Dogs" is a tale of survival in a raw social environment that breaks down to basic sex and violence in a community of drink and dissatisfication, but without the imagination or intensity of Kubrick's "A Clockwork Orange." David travels from American to England for a year of intense study in his wife's village. In an attempt to speed up completion of the garage roof, an old boy friend of Amy's was hired to finish the job.

husband and proprietor of the house. It was the interaction between David, Amy and these English men that possessed the conflict and drew the film to its stirring conclusion.

The emphasis of the film was on the calculating orderly world of the mathematician. He sought overshadowed the boredom of and demanded order, but refused to face conflict. Each time a crisis arose he quietly backed away rationalizing it neatly to himself. In an ironic ending the man who refused to commit himself for personal causes finally committed himself for a humanitarian cause and defended his home against attackers with the motto "a man's home is his castle." He put his own life, his wife's life, and the town simpleton in jeopardy for some noble reason that stuck in his head. Hoffman should be complimented for his effective portrayal of the mathematician. His character had the greatest degree of warmth and believability. The character was not especially vibrant but then if it had been, it would have been extremely out of character. It's success was in its subteleties and mannerisms.

The flaws in "Straw Dogs" were many and they truly show up on a second viewing when it is much easier to be objective about the picture.. But the sheer strength of Peckinpah's finale through his stylistic use of slow motion, quick cutting, and most effective lighting makes the film worth watching. My first impression is still very real, and I do admit that the second is more calculating. To the unsuspecting viewer this film will be devestating in its sheer visual impact not in theme. But without the final scene this film would have been put on the shelf and banned os one of the more boring works in celluloid.

'A Clockwork Orange . . .

While standing in lines over break waiting to see Kubrick's newest, keep a few things in mind that will make the film more meaningful and especially more enjoyable. One, the title is "A Glockwork Orange" not "2001: A Space Odyssey." The approach to the material will be totally different. If you are looking for a repeat of "2001" then you will be severely disappointed and you are invariably selling Kubrick short. Also keep in mind that Kubrick enjoys putting the audience through the rigors that his character is traveling. Lastly, "The Last Picture Show" is great, See it if you get the chance.

State council protects buyers By JANE SEABERRY State News Staff Writer

Have you been cheated lately? What about that shoddy item you bought or the poor treatment you received by a business? Perhaps next time the Michigan Consumer Council, through its consumer complaints service, can help you receive the corrective action you need.

The Michigan Consumer Council, established in 1966, is a state agency whose primary objective is to develop consumer protection programs in the areas of legislation, consumer education and consumer complaints. The five staff members and 10 volunteers handle situations involving the consumer, and attempt to rectify those situations through various legal channels.

As a part of the state legislature, the council provides technical assistance to legislators and the governor, informing them of consumer problems and obtaining background material for possible legislation.

Big Ten's leading scorer?

By RICK GOSSELIN State News Sports Editor

Little prestige but a lot of pride will be at stake Saturday afternoon when the MSU Spartans and the Northwestern Wildcats engage in cage competition at Jenison Field House. The opening tip is scheduled for 2 p.m.

The best MSU can do in the conference race is finish in the upper echalons of the second division. The Spartans are deadlocked in sixth place with Wisconsin and Illinois at 5-8, two notches above this week's opponent, Northwestern. The Wildcats are the league's basement team with a 3-10 mark.

"Northwestern is a hard luck team whose record doesn't indicate their true ability," MSU Coach Gus Ganakas said.

In the initial meeting of the two teams this season, Northwestern walked off with a 76-69 overtime win before a scant crowd of 1,700 at McGaw Hall in Evanston. The Spartans made a brilliant comeback effort in the game but fell in the extra session when they could manage only three points in the overtime period — all by Allen

Mike Robinson, as has been the case all season and Ganakas hopes will be the case for the next two seasons, led the Spartans with 25 points - a bad game for him considering that in Big Ten play he has scored 26 points or more in all but three games.

"Mike's an exciting player both for the fan and for his coach," until we were a few games into the Big Ten season. He's caught fire and just hasn't cooled off."

Robinson has an excellent shot at the Big Ten scoring title. He carries with him into the season't final game an average that hugs the 28-point per game barrier and a solid four point edge over Alan Hornyak of Ohio State who has already finished his season. At the conclusion of Saturday's contest, Ganakas said. "His brilliance as a Robinson should be walking off player really didn't start to show the court as the first MSU

Panel urges MSU law school

appropriate the $796,114 recommended by the committee to MSU will depend on the 'legislative process." I am supportive of the idea of a law school at MSU at some point," the governor said at a press conference. Milliken's budget request was prepared before the committee's report was completed. State Sen. Robert W. Davis, R

Gaylord, a member of the joint committee and the Senate Appropriations Committee, said the appropriations committee "probably" appropriate some funds for the MSU law school this year. "I believe we do have the votes to include the starting of a law school at MSU," Davis said. Ballenger said he is "optimistic that there will be favorable action by the legislature on the law school this If given $796,114, it is expected MSU would be able to provide an adequate library staff and collection, appropriate faculty including a dean, clerical staff and office equipment and provide student scholarships.

The committee estimates that $660,374 and $711,784, respectively, would be needed for the second and third years of the law school's operation.

The committee recomendation does not include funds for physical facilities to house the proposed school. "On a temporary basis MSU has ample physical space for these items. Obviously, by the time the size of the faculty, the student body, and the library reach their growth objectives, a law building must be provided whether through more construction or the renovation of old space," the report states.

It is estimated that $3 million would be needed for a new law building. The committee said $1.5 million would be required to build a law library building and use renovated existing facilities for faculty and classroom space. The rationale for recommending placement of the state's next law school at MSU is approval before establi based on the University's law school. The trustee interdisciplinary programs, its proximity to state government offices and its commitment to the land grant or public service philosophy.

The committee also said MSU Saginaw Valley College has "demonstrated a expressed interest constructive and well - thought - school.
