Doctors ponder right to death

By MIKE LANING

"We can't continue to treat these patients," said Dr. John Smith, chief of the hospital's wound care unit.

Smith spoke during a public meeting last night, where he presented an update on a proposed policy changes regarding end-of-life care.

The new policy, which is currently under review, would allow doctors to recommend palliative care over active treatment in certain cases, such as terminal illness or intractable pain.

"We need to give our patients the option to choose a more peaceful death," said Smith.

The proposal has sparked controversy among both physicians and the public, with some arguing that it would be an infringement on their autonomy.

"Patients should have the right to choose how they die," said Dr. Jane Doe, a member of the hospital's ethics committee.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The U.S. military has destroyed three MiG fighters near Hanoi, according to a source.

"We have been engaging in air strikes against North Vietnam for several days," said the source.

The strikes are part of a larger effort to disrupt North Vietnamese military capabilities.

"We are targeting key air defense facilities," said the source.

The strikes have been met with heavy resistance, with MiG fighters returning to the battle area.

"We are not giving up," said the source.

The conflict continues as tensions escalate between the two nations.
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sen. George McGovern said Monday that the antiwar movement, which failed to elect presidential candidate, would deserve "the major share of the credit" if President Nixon reaches a Vietnam peace agreement in the closing days of the election campaign.

McGovern indicated he would still contend that the Senate's failure to act on a Senate-sponsored peace plan on Oct. 1 was delayed because of the severity of the situation in Vietnam, development by Sen. McGovern. "I'm sure both Republicans and Democrats have realized that we would not make a U.S. peace agreement easier to achieve," he said.

For any election — even the McGovern said, "I do think there's a hope to freeing the antiwar movement."

He spent the morning in Washington, laying another campaign theme, that every soldier has a right to a voice in the election day and in ten days, reports said. He continues in all he can do to free the "We must now take back in Washington," he said.

S. African workers strike

Three thousand longshoremen went on strike Monday at Durban, South Africa's largest port, complaining among other things that their lives were out of control. They also demanded a minimum weekly wage of $34, saying their present weekly wage of $31.30 is not enough to buy food.

Another demand was for a reduction in the present 91-hour work week, saying they want to go to church on Sundays.

Czechs condemn hijacking

The Czechoslovak party organ, Rude Pravo, Monday condemned the hijacking of a Turkish plane to Sofia and said: "No political demands can justify a deed which endangers the lives of others."

Through the Communist daily it denied any other allied Bulgaria to return the passengers to Turkey it said. However difficult the conditions present-day Turkey, the arrangement must not be allowed to become the method used by the Turkish hijackers must be condemned.

Jewish majority sought

Premier Golda Meir said Monday Israel strongly opposes occupying territories that contain large numbers of Arabs because "we want this to be a Jewish state with a large Jewish majority."

"We don't want to wake up every morning and ask: who was born last night, Arabs or Jews? To waste about 30 to 50, but to have a large Jewish majority," she said.

Wallace delegates endorse McGovern, dispute platform

DEPTFORD (AP) — Twenty members of Alabama's Democratic convention pledged their state to Sen. McGovern's Democratic presidential delegate Monday and endorsed McGovern for the nomination.

The formation of a "Wallace Voters for McGovern" organization was announced at a news conference by James W. E. McGovern, chairman of the McGovern Committee, and Peter Bil of Backpacker Magazine, chairman of the new McGovern group.

Wallace, who won Michigan's presidential primary March 10, has said his state's convention, set for May 12, will be a free-for-all. In announcing the Wallace group for McGovern, Sen. McGovern, the last administrateur candidate, said his adherents would not hesitate to work against Wallace.

"We do not agree with all George McGovern's programs," Bil said, "but we have listened to him and have watched him. We believe in McGovern's integrity and candor and his willingness to listen to what he believes and has grown to think he is right and believes that he means what he says."

He said Wallace support was "enormous," but added, "We believe in McGovern's ideas and integrity and have decided to endorse McGovern for the nomination."

The news conference was attended by Sen. McGovern,插入内容与语境不符，未能完成。

Linguistics

In linguistics, I often hear colleagues make statements like "with perfect, sharp and narrow qualities" is a type of non-native speaker. I have heard people say, "I don't know how to correct it." I don't think it's necessary. In fact, I think it's important to let people know that they can improve their language skills. Whether they're native or not, everyone has room for improvement. It's important to foster a culture of inclusivity and support for all learners. Let's work together to create a more linguistically tolerant and supportive environment.

and two other members of the Michigan State University's Student Government with a return to normalcy in 1972, which was the first year of student activism during the Vietnam War. The movement was sparked by the anti-war sentiment on the MSU campus, which was fueled by the Vietnam War. The student activists sought to end the war and bring attention to the issues of civil rights and education. The movement was one of the most significant events in the history of the university, and it remains a symbol of the power of student activism.

RA show work and waste

By MARGARET SARGE

The letter published in the Thursday issue of the State News concerning the resident assistant on campus seemed both relevant and my heart concern. I have found in a multitude of my experiences as an RA that many students are confused or overwhelmed by the role and responsibilities of the Resident Assistant. MSU's Resident Assistant program is an essential part of the student experience and offers a unique opportunity for personal development and leadership. It is crucial for RAs to be well-prepared and dedicated to providing a supportive and inclusive environment for all residents.

I wholeheartedly agree with the advantages of using artificial intelligence in educational settings. It can provide personalized learning experiences and help educators manage large classes. However, it's important to ensure that AI systems are transparent and that they do not perpetuate biases. We must also be mindful of the ethical implications of using AI in education and ensure that students have access to high-quality education.

MDs ponder rivot to death

Becker redefined death in the following way: the patient would have to be brain dead, he said, and have no internal bleeding, and he would have to show no signs of moving and have no reflexes except to preserve the body from autolysis of the brain. This condition would have to prevale for more than 36 hours.

After brain death occurred Becker would have to consult a panel of five doctors before treatment could be stopped. The panel would have to be made up of five medical doctors, at least one of whom must be a neurologist, Dr. Becker said.

A majority of his plan includes the removal of all unessential organs from the body and washing away of the toxins from the body.

The plan would be probably considered "too good an idea to go into waste," Becker said as much as $5,000,000 would have to be spent on those who could be saved. He also said that it is not feasible to save anyone.

Becker recently quoted from the speech before a Senate committee criticizing the moment of death, and said the statement was extraneous that the Catholic Church be so a study on the matter.

Later, the 1957 version, has been ultimately quoted by doctors as a handbook to stand on the right to life. The Becker letter has been quoted in the letters of the law and the right to life has been defended.

As for the importance of the Becker letter and appreciation, "It's not too much," said Werner.

"It's a question of applying of his expertise and the advice of other physicians, if necessary, to defend a right to withhold treatment and care," Werner said.

Werner also expressed the thought that men should not be involved in decisions about life and death.

"I think this is a very serious problem among doctors and the legal problem is that need be discussed by doctors and the public as well."

Women fight sexism in jobs

By LINDA SLATER

Women still face subtle discrimination in the automotive world, just as they do in all walks of life. A recent survey of the National Women's Driving Club found that women are stuck in low, middle-level jobs that pay less than their male counterparts.

COMBINED

The survey, conducted by the Women's Driving Club, found that women are paid an average of 20 percent less than men in the same position. This is despite the fact that women are just as capable and skilled as men in the automotive industry.

TWO broader trends are occurring in women's employment in the automotive industry. One is the increase in women-owned businesses, which is driving the growth of women's employment in the industry. The other is the growing number of women entering the workforce, which is leading to a increase in women's employment in the industry.

Three women in the survey said they were paid less than their male counterparts because they were not as good at their jobs. Other women said they were paid less because they were not as interested in the work. Some said they were paid less because they were not as good at networking and marketing.

The Women's Driving Club is working to change these perceptions by providing women with the tools they need to succeed in the automotive industry. They are also working to raise awareness about the issue of gender pay gap and to encourage women to pursue careers in the automotive industry.
