Violence links four countries

By ANTHONY MARINO, Columnist

Four nations in today's world that are locked in a bitter internal struggle are Iran, Iraq, Afghanistan and Lebanon. Each nation is trying to assert control over their own internal affairs and to maintain their own local power structures.

Iran's supreme leader, Ayatollah Khamenei, has been trying to control the Islamic Republic of Iran's military and political institutions. Iraq's government is divided between the Shia-led government and the Sunni-led militias. Afghanistan is struggling with the Taliban and the American military. Lebanon is divided between the Shia Hezbollah group and the Western-backed government.

In recent weeks, there have been reports of attacks on civilians in these countries. In Iran, there have been protests against the government's economic policies. In Iraq, there have been clashes between the government forces and the militias. In Afghanistan, there have been fighting between the Taliban and the government forces. In Lebanon, there have been clashes between the government forces and the Shia Hezbollah group.

These conflicts have led to the displacement of thousands of people. According to the United Nations, over one million people have been displaced in these four countries. The United Nations is calling for a cessation of violence and a peaceful resolution of these conflicts.

In addition, there have been reports of human rights violations in these countries. According to Human Rights Watch, there have been reports of torture, arbitrary detention, and extrajudicial killings in Iran, Iraq, Afghanistan, and Lebanon.

The United Nations is calling on the international community to take action to end these violations and to protect the human rights of the people in these countries.

ARGENTINA

Argentina's war growing rapidly

By ANTHONY MARINO, Columnist

Argentina's civil war is expanding, with both sides stepping up their attacks on each other. The government forces are using heavy machinery and artillery, while the guerrillas are using small arms and ambushes.

Despite efforts by the government to negotiate a peace deal, the conflict continues to escalate. The death toll is now over 10,000, with hundreds of civilians killed in the fighting.

The United Nations is calling on both sides to cease their violence and to start peace talks. The United Nations is also calling on the international community to provide humanitarian aid to the people affected by the conflict.

Student financial help not food stamps' job

One of the nation's highest ranking congressmen, Rep. Richard B. Russell, is to preside over a House Agriculture Committee meeting this week. A House of Representatives commit-tee investigation into the 1978 stock market crash is underway, and the Senate subcommittee has just three days to complete its review of the crash. It is a matter of reform; the opinions range from complete elimi- nation to cautious modifications.

What should a program be which would guarantee assistance to the truly needy and unemployable to those out only for a few extra bucks?

Pour certain, to be earned eligibility status are students who are granted as eligible dependents by their parents.

Perhaps this is the best. The question about whether Congress should rule all students ineligible unless they came from a destitute family.

While students need to eat, they need to eat every bit as much as anybody else, and that of a destitute family, stems from the voluntary sacrifice of nearly every child's best interest for education. Education is not in the same category as medicine, clothing and rent. A far greater proportion of a destitute family's income goes to education than to those.

Students who go hungry and to school in reality can't afford to go to school. The problem is not one of education and should be solved through educational channel-counseling through the criminal justice and University and the state, and not through food stamps.

Unfortunately, the powers that be haven't seen it as such. It is not at all encouraging to see the state make arrangements for higher education, the University tables up the financial aid sources dried up.

But while aid to students need to be increased, the back-door assistance of food stamps is the wrong way to do it. Financially, as students, as well as other groups of food stamp passengers, should be jumped from eligibility to make room for those who have a need and no other recourse.

Drop and add process: bureaucratic nightmare

Drop and add process: bureaucratic nightmare

It was a short-lived fling. Briefly a writer, then a college student, then a writer again. By the time I got the department's stupid, undisciplined boss to read my work, I had "leav¬ed" on my own. Breaking up with a writer is like breaking up with a jeweler; you end up with nothing but your ex's gold jewelry.

The problem with the "drop and add" process in the academic world is that it is not as straightforward as in the private sector. In the private sector, if you drop a job, you can simply add another one. But in the academic world, if you drop a job, you can only add another job if you have the necessary qualifications. And if you do not have the necessary qualifications, you cannot add another job.

I was thinking about this while I was reading a book about the academic world. The book mentioned the "drop and add" process, but it did not explain why it is so difficult. I decided to research the issue further.

I started by talking to a few colleagues who had gone through the "drop and add" process. They told me that it was very difficult and that they had had to work very hard to get the necessary qualifications.

I then decided to talk to a few professors who had been through the "drop and add" process. They told me that it was very difficult and that they had had to work very hard to get the necessary qualifications.

I finally decided to talk to a few students who had gone through the "drop and add" process. They told me that it was very difficult and that they had had to work very hard to get the necessary qualifications.

As I was writing this article, I was thinking about the "drop and add" process. I decided to talk to a few more colleagues who had gone through the "drop and add" process. They told me that it was very difficult and that they had had to work very hard to get the necessary qualifications.

British bands continue to play good rock

By DAVID DE MARTINO
State News Reviewer

Good British rock and roll has always seemed slightly cleaner and lighter than its American counterpart. Rare rock scene soundtrack, the hit and run and the derivation of British groups to older rock and roll complexes in Britain. Recent records by groups like Cream and John Mayall's Bluesbreakers have been received with enthusiasm in the States. The influence of British groups on American rock and roll seems to be increasing.

At the same time, the world of music is changing. What was once the exclusive domain of British rock groups is now shared with American bands. The American audience is becoming more sophisticated and the demand for well-produced, well-written music is increasing.

This is not to say that British rock and roll is not still good. Far from it. There are many fine British bands still playing today. But the scene is changing and the audience's tastes are changing.

The future of rock and roll is uncertain. But one thing is clear: British rock and roll has played a significant role in shaping the music of today.

Former state PSC head gives committee records

HOUGHTON COUNTY— Former Public Service Commissioner William D. Rosenberg has turned over a ton of his personal utility files to a special House committee investigating the PSC regulatory agency. Rosenberg, who was scheduled to be called before the committee Oct. 17, Wednesday supplied appointment books, 17,000 pages of business cards, and additional copies of Supreme Court decisions, according to PSC Chair Charles W. Martin.

I would say we'll get a clearer picture of what they were, but that will help determine whether the span involved or not, according to Martin.

Business cards were turned over to a House committee investigating the PSC regulatory agency, according to Federal Energy Administration Chief Frank C. McNeil.

It is probably not in the best interest of anyone who might be under investigation to keep files, according to McNeil.

I would say we'll get a clearer picture of what they were, but that will help determine whether the span is above or not, according to Martin.

The House records, obtained by Martin, were from the time of the Administration's subpoena to the time of Rosenberg's tenure. Rosenberg had to return records by the end of the month.

The committee records contained a few Supreme Court decisions, according to Rosenberg.

The records also included a few Supreme Court decisions, according to the committee.

The committee's goal is to obtain the truth, not to be unduly concerned with personal preferences, according to Rosenberg.
