Supreme Court upholds drug seller's conviction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today upheld the conviction of a drug seller, extending its recent pattern of broadening the definition of drug conspiracy and raising the bar for discrediting government informants. The case, Michigan v. Boulware, involves a drug shipment from Detroit to New York City, and is the latest in a string of decisions in which the court has reaffirmed its commitment to the fight against organized crime.

The court's ruling in Boulware was unanimous and came on a 9-0 vote. Writing for the majority, Justice Antonin Scalia said the government had presented sufficient evidence to support the conviction, and that the defendant had failed to show any constitutional violations.

Boulware, 36, was convicted in federal court in Detroit in 1978 for his role in a large-scale drug distribution network. He had been charged with conspiracy to distribute heroin, cocaine, and marijuana.

The case is one of a series of federal drug conspiracy cases that have come before the court in recent years. In each of those cases, the court has upheld convictions based on evidence gathered from confidential informants.

In Boulware, the government presented evidence that the defendant had received shipments of drugs from a trusted informant. Boulware had arranged for the informant to deliver the drugs to an undercover agent. When the delivery was made, police arrested Boulware and seized 100 kilograms of heroin and 50 kilograms of cocaine.

The lower court had thrown out Boulware's conviction, ruling that the government's evidence was insufficient to show that Boulware had intended to violate any federal laws. The court of appeals had agreed with that decision.

Scalia said the lower courts had erred in their analysis. While he acknowledged that the evidence was circumstantial, he said it was compelling enough to support a conviction.

The court also ruled that the government had properly introduced evidence of Boulware's prior drug-related crimes. Scalia said that evidence was relevant to show Boulware's intent to engage in illegal drug dealing.

The court's decision in Boulware is likely to be influential in future drug conspiracy cases. Drug conspiracy is a federal crime that can carry a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison.

In other drug-related cases, the court has upheld convictions based on evidence from confidential informants. In United States v. Williams, the court upheld a conviction based on evidence from a member of the Gambino crime family. In United States v. Black, the court upheld a conviction based on evidence from a member of the Black gang.

However, the court has also limited the use of confidential informants in certain cases. In United States v. roosevelt, the court ruled that the government could not use an informant who had been convicted of perjury. In United States v. new york, the court ruled that the government could not use an informant who had been convicted of perjury.

The CIA and the dialectic of contradiction

After each round of revelations concerning the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency, there is usually a moral proprietor of the central intelligence agency, bushy of calls for its dissolution. In recent months, there have been an increasing number of voices raised in its favor. While many of them espouse the purported beneficent of the CIA is a formidably powerful international group of various voices who have alluded to the United States and the CIA should be dismissed. With the latest revelations on the CIA, the State press would like to add its support for the dissolution of an agency which has existed for the past and will probably cause in the future inevitably to its worth, and which will continue to behave in a manner totally inimical with both democracy and U.S. foreign policy.

This is to present the known aspects of the recent CIA disclosures which are undeniably present. We are not analyzing the CIA, what it is and what it works. Instead, we are pointing to the inevitable conclusion that it presents us with an atomic of organized crime, responsible or incomparably to the reality of that in which it is engaged.

The CIA covert use of agents, clerics, clergy, politicians, government officials, the military, the intelligence business and ordinary citizens cannot be easily dismissed as the result of individual convictions or supervision which can be corrected.

Congress believes that it will be able to establish a strong oversight committee that can monitor activities of the CIA. It is not impressed that the CIA has been under the control of the President for the past 15 years while it has conducted thousands of covert operations.

The CIA, in Victor Marchetti, author of The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence, has said, facts are in the grasp of those who are not aware of those who are

The committee on foreign operations has an interest in pursuing a policy of destroying an independent knowledge of field conditions, field personnel, competence, attitude, of its contacts and first hand evidence of the social and political situations in areas of the world. When the CIA has said that a covert operation is required in an area for purposes of U.S. security, and that it is the right of the President to order covert operations, it has stated that it is not to be imposed on the President to impose ultimate authority—no matter what he finds, to impose authority—no matter what he finds.

There is a dialectic in all of this, and the result is an agency which is inherently unaccountable, even by the most stringent oversight commissions. What we must realize, though, is not even what the Senate Intelligence Committee advocates in the way of oversight will be created because of the fight between Congress and the President over which will eventually result in compromise.

The point is, however, that it is clear that intelligence gathering and that of covert operations, are therefore, more likely to be used to support the latter of the two continua than to improve upon the former when the nature of the intelligence gathering does not conform to that of the CIA's expectations. Thus any overt operation, to make opposition more difficult, will be used to serve as a matter to the noise which encompassed the matter in the creation of the first plan. This is the contradiction which must be eliminated from foreign U.S. policy if the United States is to regain the dignity it once had in the international arena and if we are to encourage the world that there is a source of the intelligence which is engaged.

We do not question the need to gather intelligence. The point is, that have been made time and time again that there are presently existent sources of intelligence gathering agencies of the United States, and any one of them can be designated for covert operations.

Nobody believes that each of the thousands of covert operations conducted by the CIA since 1945 has been essential to U.S. foreign policy. And, if we believe, they that this fact would help heal the need for a revision of foreign policy.

We can and must strive to maintain a same and rational standard. James Woolsey, who has been discussed, was the CIA's dissolution in the ultimate prerequisite to progress in this area.

Madam, could you spare your placenta?

Grave danger

I honestly cannot understand all the current furor over the so-called "national bras" and the "bralettes." They are simply American inventions to solve an American problem. I know little about the alleged "danger" of the brassiere to the natural American woman. The brassiere is simply a way of life. It is a well-known fact that the brassiere was invented in the middle of the 19th century. The problem is how to make the brassiere comfortable and practical for the American woman. The British and the French have had the brassiere for a long time. We have simply accepted this American innovation. It is a matter of taste.

I am sure that the ... the brassiere is simply a way of life. It is a well-known fact that the brassiere was invented in the middle of the 19th century. Pedestrian rights

Seeking the solution to a traffic problem, a pedestrian from the Lakeside neighborhood of Lansing has written to晚报, suggesting a possible solution to the traffic problem in the area. She notes that the problem is caused by the large number of pedestrians who walk through the area during the day, and she suggests that a traffic light be installed at the intersection to control the flow of traffic.

Why are you getting up?

It's early Monday morning. The alarm clock goes off, you usually roll over and try to ignore it, but you just can't this morning. You have to get up.

Monday is the beginning of a new week, and the thought of starting it all over again makes you feel like you could just keep lying in bed all day. But you can't, you have to get up.

You look out the window and see the sun shining, and you think about all the things you have to do today. You have to go to work, you have to meet your deadlines, and you have to make sure that everything is done on time.

You know that you have to get up, but you wish you didn't have to. You wish you could just stay in bed and ignore the world.

But you can't, you have to get up, and you have to face the world.

MSU blacksmith plies ancient art

The art of blacksmithing may be a relic from a past generation, but for Norm Oswald, it’s far from a dying trade. For 19 years Oswald has been MSU’s blacksmith. His shop is well stocked with all the tools and equipment needed for his craft. The work space has an ancient feel to it with the stone workshop and the old-style blacksmith’s forge. The smell of smoke and hot metal fills the air.

Oswald, a man of few words, is known for his skill and expertise in the art of blacksmithing. He has been a part of MSU’s community for many years, and his presence is felt in the many projects he has undertaken. His work is not limited to horseshoeing, as he also repairs farm machinery and wagons, forges, welds, and even sharpens knives.

Oswald is kept busy at MSU, but he remains committed to preserving the traditional art of blacksmithing. He is an active member of the Michigan Blacksmiths Association and is dedicated to teaching the craft to the next generation.

Oswald is a living reminder of the importance of tradition and the value of skilled handwork. His dedication to the art of blacksmithing is an inspiration to others, and his work continues to be a vital part of the MSU community.
Vigil held to commemorate slain Jews

By FRANCES BROWN
State News Staff Writer

The mood was hardly likely to theSilver Maple Bromeliads, to be held at Zatechka Hall.

The vigil was held to commemorate the 12th day of the month of Nisan, which marks the anniversary of the mass murder of the Jews of the Warsaw Ghetto in 1943.

The service began with a reading of the names of those who fell, followed by a moment of silence and a prayer for world peace and understanding.

The service was led by Rabbi Bill Radolph of B'Nai Jacob Temple, who spoke about the importance of remembering the past and working towards a better future.

After the service, attendees were invited to sign a book of remembrance and to light candles in honor of the dead.

Dorm damage agreement reached

By KAT BROWN

The Michigan State Housing Authority and the dormitory residents have reached an agreement to repair damage caused by the loss of a dormitory resident.

The dormitory is located in the B wing of the university and was occupied by 50 students.

The damage was caused by a fire that occurred in the dormitory last week.

The agreement calls for the dormitory residents to pay for the repairs, with the Michigan State Housing Authority providing the labor.

Great issues class discusses ideals of America's 200th

By PATRICIA LAURENT

The Great Issues class discussed the ideals of America's 200th birthday.

The class, which is part of the Bicentennial Celebration, explores the concept of the United States as a nation of ideals.

The discussion centered around the idea of a nation of equals and the role of citizens in shaping the nation.

The class has been meeting once a week throughout the school year to discuss the meaning of the Bicentennial celebration.

The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, April 10, at 7 p.m. in Room 101 of the B wing.
