Affirmative action plan under fire

LANSING, Michigan — Nearly every student at the University of Michigan has been affected by the affirmative action policies that are in place now, and are likely to remain in effect for the foreseeable future.

African American and Hispanic students have been given priority in their admissions and financial aid, and this has led to a great increase in the number of minority students on campus.

However, the university has also been criticized for its policies, and there is a growing movement to change them. Some students and faculty members feel that the university is not doing enough to help minority students, while others believe that the policies are necessary and effective.

The topic of affirmative action is likely to continue to be a significant one, as the university and its students navigate the complexities of diversity and inclusion in an increasingly diverse world.

THAI students face trial

A Thai university in Bangkok has expelled two students under criticism from the minister of education, who said they showed "extreme behavior" in a protest against the government.

The students were among at least 100 protesters who gathered outside the Ministry of Education in Bangkok on Thursday to demand the resignation of the minister, who they accuse of being corrupt and incompetent.

The protest was the latest in a series of demonstrations in Thailand, where students and workers have been calling for political and economic reforms.

The minister, Prayut Chan-o-cha, said the students had violated the constitution and the law, and that they would be referred to the courts. He also called for greater cooperation with the police and the military to ensure law and order.

The students vowed to continue their protests, saying they were not deterred by the minister's actions.

U.S. delivered slap

By visiting Vietnam's application for United Nations membership, the United States has delivered another slap in the face to the small country. This is why Vietnam greeted the U.S. move with a bang. The Black Dragon institute has announced its intention to support Vietnam. U.S. Ambassador William J. Burns said Vietnam was not qualified for UN membership because it cannot be recognized by the United States. The South Vietnamese authorities have reacted with an open show of defiance and anger. Outgrowth of sexism

By DAKOTA HUTCHIS

In an article in the November 15, 1976, issue of the New York Times, author and teacher D.A. HUTCHISON discusses the phenomenon of sexual assault. He argues that sexual assault is not only a physical act but also a social and cultural phenomenon. He suggests that sexual assault is a common occurrence in our society and is often overlooked.

Kresge set for display of 61 Michigan paintings

An exhibition of Michigan paintings received before 1914 will be held Sunday in the art gallery of the Kresge College Union, following an opening reception from 2 to 4 p.m. The exhibition continues through Jan. 1.

Gallery director Joe Lee said the paintings, collected by the late R. Paul and Hazel Weigle Kitchen, were presented to the college by their daughter, Mrs. Barbara Weigle Kitchen. The collection consists of works by Michigan artists, including Edna M. Bessey, John O. Brown and Edward J. Henry. The collection will be on display through the spring.

World premiere performance performance to be given by MSU pianist

President E. Gordon E. Nixon's mother, Helen J. Nixon, will give the world premiere performance of a work especially written for her by son, Fredric M. Nixon, in the Weill Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Friday. The work, a concerto for piano and orchestra, was written by John Pounds in the composer's honor. The concerto received its world premiere at the University of Michigan earlier this year and was conducted by a guest conductor.

The concert will include the world premiere of a piano concerto by the late American composer Morton Subotnick, who was a student at the University of Michigan.

more time before the politicians decide what the office of mayor at the end of June.

"When people are discussing the future of the office of mayor," Walsh said, "we ought to know what kind of mayor it is.

The costs of separation would be about $3,000. Walsh said.

"As I say, I don't think we should spend $3,000 for a special election where we might cancel it with another election. After all, Michigan, overhead.

"I propose to have a special election," Knight McMillon, another commission member, said. "Because the public tends to think that staying in the same seat is not the same as a special election.

Any call for a special election would be a vote in favor of the mayor's re-election, he said. "The council's a number of members of the council, and it's possible it would pass. But that's not necessarily going to be a vote in favor of moving on to a new council."

If a special election is held solidly with the mayor and by the election, he added, the voters will bond directly and resolve the council with the council's election. Walsh said that the threat making a few changes in the charter to accommodate the opposition.

They might change the present provision for the election of city council members from their ward representation and five elected at large, he said, to four from the wards and four elected at large.

"We hope to meet with the city council members within a few weeks at least, and to get the last looks at the plan of the proposed charter," Walsh said.

Four of council members—Larry Adkins, James Halt, William Brooks and Jack Garber—said at the Nov. 5 charter commission meeting that the new charter is desirable and that only "specific, limited" amendments to the present charter be made.

These amendments would increase the member's authority, in his opinion of his members, but would provide a "promised pool of people who could influence," Garber said.

The charter commission would receive all objections to the charter which would be presented to the mayor, McMillon said, but they aren't likely to accept them all.

Some sections of the charter that will probably be revised, he said, are in the residency requirements and the term system. Municipalities, under the charter, are required to have a mayor of at least 25 years of age.

The intent of some of the charter's provisions may have been misconstrued by voters and council members, McMillon said. "If so, we'll have to improve the language," he said.

"All-Star Coffeehouse" set to showcase talent

A portion of all the shows talent that MSU residence hall dwellers generated will be showcased this every night in the first four "All-Star Coffeehouses.""All-Star Coffeehouses," which begin at 7:30 p.m. in the University Auditorium.

Resident Pat Enslow and the organizing committee, which judging about 50 shows, tries to provide diversity in the show. The show will feature performance by poetry readers, instrumentalists, vocalists, magicians, pianists and players groups.

Tickets to the event are $2 and may be purchased at the door.

"We're trying to make money on the talent," Enslow said, "not try to keep even. That's why the shows are so cheap.

People have the talent that good shows are only expenses," he added. "That's not necessarily true. There's a lot of talent on the campus and the show proves it."

The book no college student should be without.

It may not contain any great reading material, but it does contain some truly wonderful eating material.

That's because our indispensable book is a book of McDonald's Gift Certificates. It contains only five dollars (it's an expensive soft cover edition). And each of the ten certificated dollars is worth fifty cents toward the purchase of delicious McDonald's hamburgers, our golden fry and all our other good food.

So, when your scholar is starved for more knowledge, make sure he has a book of our Gift Certificates around.

It'll give him food for thought.

MSU packaging student constructs authentic tipi

The tipi - a Sioux word meaning "dwelling of," contains of two poles and a frame made of 13 loops, straight spokes, and cross-poles arranged in a cone. The exterior skin, called "lining," is stretched around the frame of the tipi and extends from the ground to a height of about 17 feet. The exterior skin consists from about 10 strips above the ground to the top of the tipi, where the poles are helmed by a cover of muslin, a loose cloth called "canvas." The tipi poles are attached to the tipi skin and are held together by the flow of air carrying smoke out the top of the tipi. The ends of the exterior skin are secured together above the entrance with "interior skin," which maintains the "shape" of building by not only holding up the tipi skin - but also "smoke," "drafts," and air.

There were a lot of people living in tipis then, and we also had some ideas and a book describing how they are built," he explained.

The exterior skin, Pritchard explained, comes from a local supply house and is secured between industrial sewing machines. The skin was made multilayered, with muslin. Finding and building the poles was an easy task, but we were able to get them of a local Sioux. Tipi poles must be straight, though they are best at least 30 feet, and are always made from local native trees and light, strong wood like the Lodge Pole, Sip, and White Cedar, Sabin or Maple.

To those who view the tipi as nothing more than a glorified pop tent, Pritchard replies that "the tipi is a form of architecture and a structure and simple design that can perform in all types of weather. For example, the space between the top of the tipi skin and the bottom of the interior skin allows air to flow between the two skins and up through the two skins and out through the top of the tipi skin. This means that more air is able to enter the tipi than at any temperature. At night, this flow of air carries smoke out through the top of the tipi skin, which is the inner edge of the sides of the tipi skin and out through the space below the exterior skin. This tipi skin is not pelted, but has a layer of muslin on the inside. The muslin is used to allow the smoke to escape. This allows the smoke to escape from the tipi and out through the interior skin.

The muslin is attached to a rope that is sewn, with a single loop, to each pole in the topi. The two poles are kept apart by a rope and the loop creates a space that allows water to flow down the inner sides of the poles and out of the tipi.

Photographs and text by Ed Yeomans

Pritchard adjusts the smoke flaps on his Sioux-style tipi. The flaps are designed to regulate the currents of air carrying smoke out through the chimney of the tipi.

The exterior skin does not cover the entire tipi but leaves a gap of about 4 inches on the bottom. This allows air to flow through the tipi and create drafts that eventually draw the smoke out the chimney while leaving the warm air in. The painted symbols are from patterns used by the Sioux.

The Teachings of Jose Cuervo:

"How to get the juices flowing."

The best way to get the juices flowing is to plug into the best skills. Jose Cuervo, 1976, because Jose Cuervo is the premier of his tribe. And he has been since the first day it was ready in 1976.

Then the same is true. Is just plug into the best skills. Take orange juice, for example. Or pomegranate juice, or pineapple. Or whatever.
The Redbirds, a squad which sat on the bottom of the Western Conference during most of last year, have turned it around this year. The team is currently 5 and 1 and is tied with the Wisconsin Badgers for the title. Of course, the Badgers are a much stronger team than the Redbirds, but the Redbirds have made a surprising come from behind victory this year over the Badgers, a team which is considered a strong contender for the championship. "It would be a wonderful thing to see," said the team's captain. "Fuller's touchdown will go down in history as the most exciting play of the season." The victory was a turning point in the team's fortunes, and it was a much-needed boost for the Redbirds. "It's been a long time since we've had a win," said the team's coach. The Redbirds will now turn their attention to the upcoming season, where they hope to continue their winning streak. "We're looking forward to the upcoming games," said the coach. "We have a lot of potential on this team, and we're excited to see how we can do this year."
Kelley files beef against hypnotist

Michigan State Police said Friday they are seeking criminal charges against a hypnotist who practiced his technique on people against their will.

Capt. Kenneth Kelley said his office has been investigating the matter for about a week and that a report was made to them Thursday.

Kelley said he could not discuss the specifics of the case because it is now in the hands of another state agency.

A hypnotist, who has been practicing hypnosis for more than 20 years, has been operating a hypnosis center in the Lansing area.

Kelley said he does not know the name of the hypnotist but is aware of his work.

He said he has received complaints from people who were hypnotized without their consent.

Kelley said he plans to file charges against the hypnotist if the investigation turned up anything conclusive.

In the meantime, he urged people not to allow themselves to be hypnotized without their consent.

He also advised people to be cautious when selecting a hypnotist and to ask about their qualifications and methods.

The investigation is being conducted by the Michigan State Police, which has jurisdiction over criminal matters.

Kelley said he hopes the investigation will lead to charges being filed against the hypnotist.

He urged people to report any instances of hypnotists practicing on them without their consent to the Michigan State Police.

Kelley said he also plans to speak to the hypnotist himself to determine if any criminal charges should be filed.

He said he would like to hear from anyone who has been hypnotized without their consent.

The Michigan State Police are currently investigating the matter and have not yet made any determinations.

Kelley said he hopes to be able to provide more information about the case in the near future.

In the meantime, he urged people to be cautious when selecting a hypnotist and to ask about their qualifications and methods.
MSU lacks plan implementation, former director says

MSU Professor of Theater and Drama Richard Eddy said he had hoped to see action on a plan to establish an endowed chair and to form a theater company at the university. The plan was proposed by Eddy and approved by the university's Board of Trustees in 1975.

Eddy, who retired from the university in 1980, said he had hoped to see the plan implemented. However, he said, he had been disappointed to see the plan fall through.

"The plan was a good one, and I was disappointed that it didn't work," Eddy said. "I had hoped to see it implemented, but it didn't happen."

Chemical society appoints prof

Richard E. Schwendeman, professor of chemistry at MSU, has been appointed to the Petroleum Research Advisory of the American Chemical Society by Dale Atkin, editor of the Slate News. Schwendeman, along with about 30 other members of the advisory committee, will examine research and education proposals and make funding recommendations for grants from the Petroleum Research Fund.

Members of the advisory screen proposals and decide, under certain guidelines, which to fund, Schwendeman said. Two factors are involved in determining which proposals are granted these funds, Schwendeman explained. First, he said, the research must be basic, with no specific application involved. Second, the proposed research must pertain to the petroleum industry in some aspect, Schwendeman said.

"The proposals screened consist of a very wide range—mostly in chemistry and physics," he said. Schwendeman recently received a $48,000 research grant from the National Science Foundation for his work in microwave studies of molecular structure and processes.

"Forty-eight thousand doesn't go very far for research in day and age," Schwendeman commented. "About three-quarters go for salary and university overhead expenses." Schwendeman's studies involve exposing samples of gases such as hydrogen to infrared or other radiation. The operation is then checked by resonances—the frequency by which the radiation is absorbed by the sample.

The collisional properties of molecules, interaction of free atoms and the interaction of atoms within molecules are included in Schwendeman's research.
