Tarr says new information may halt Seafarer project

Starr-Willard Free Writer

In December, the New England Seafarer Team, a U.S. Navy-sponsored group of workers, held a press conference to announce that they had found evidence of a secret nuclear reactor being built at the Seafarer Project site near the Columbia River in Washington. The Seafarer Project, a joint venture of the U.S. Navy and the Atomic Energy Commission, is being built to test the feasibility of using nuclear energy to generate electricity.

Director of the project, James E. Stoddard, said that the new information had not altered his belief that the Seafarer Project was a sound investment. He said that the new information had been gathered after months of investigation by the team of researchers working on the project.

The team of researchers working on the project were given a tour of the site by Stoddard and his staff. The tour included a visit to the reactor site, where the team was shown the construction progress to date.

The team then conducted a thorough investigation of the site, using a variety of methods, including X-rays, sonar, and specialized equipment. They discovered that the reactor was not being built as originally planned, and that there were several serious safety violations.

The team's findings were presented to Stoddard, who agreed to release the information to the public. The release of the information caused a public outcry, with many people expressing concern about the safety of the project. The project was subsequently halted, and the site was dismantled.

The new information has had a significant impact on the project, as it has caused many people to question the wisdom of investing in nuclear energy. The project has also been the subject of much media attention, with many news outlets covering the story in depth.

Despite the troubles, Stoddard remains optimistic about the future of the project. He said that the team had discovered several areas of potential improvement, and that he was confident that the project could be salvaged with some additional work.

The team's findings have also led to a number of changes in the way the project is being run. The team has been given a greater degree of autonomy, and is now able to make decisions about the project without having to seek approval from higher levels of management.

The team is now working to develop a new design for the reactor, which they believe will be safer and more efficient than the original design. The team is also working to improve the site's safety record, and to address any concerns that the public may have about the project.

Carter economic plan extends

Smith wins support of ruling party

WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration's $288 billion economic stimulus plan has won the support of most major congressional leaders and most business executives, who say the program will help to stabilize an economy that is now in a recession.

The plan, which was announced by President Carter on Monday, includes a number of key components, including a tax cut for individuals, a reduction in interest rates, and increased government spending on infrastructure and education.

The tax cut, which is estimated to be worth about $125 billion over the next five years, will provide a $400 refund to individuals and $1,200 to married couples.

The reduction in interest rates, which is expected to save consumers about $30 billion over the next five years, will lower the cost of borrowing for home and car purchases.

The increased government spending, which is expected to benefit the construction and health care industries, will create about 2 million new jobs over the next five years.

The plan also includes a number of other measures, such as a $10 billion investment in public transportation, a $5 billion investment in education, and a $20 billion investment in research and development.

The administration's economic plan has been praised by most of the country's leading economists, who say it is necessary to stabilize an economy that is in a recession.

However, some critics have raised concerns about the plan's potential impact on the budget deficit.

Cuban political prisoner released to be seen as interest in accord with human rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has released a Cuban political prisoner as part of a broader effort to improve relations with the communist government.

The prisoner, who had been held for more than a decade, was released on Thursday after a long and difficult legal process.

The release is seen as a positive step toward improving relations between the United States and Cuba, which have been strained for many years due to Cuba's support of revolutionary movements in other parts of the world.

The release of the prisoner is also seen as a sign of good faith by the Cuban government, which has been criticized for its human rights record.

The United States has been working to improve relations with Cuba for many years, but progress has been slow due to differences over issues such as trade and political freedom.

The release of the prisoner is seen as a step in the right direction, and it is hoped that it will lead to further improvements in relations between the two countries.

New law a boon to redlining opponents

The fight against redlining is on. Strong support is forming for the fight against redlining, a suddenly visible issue in Michigan. Leaders from across the state are working to mark innovative new laws that will take effect in 1997.

The new law will finally enable fair housing advocates to prove or disprove their allegations about the existence of redlining. On March 1, as part of the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act, more than 3,700 lending institutions must disclose records that indicate where in the state they have lent money and for what purpose. Now this information is available only by zip code area. As of March 1, it will have to be date by census tract, so it will be much easier to pinpoint redlining. All of us. Knowing, for example, falls under one zip code.

to mortgage disclosures by zip code area very likely.

Right now, absolutely no law in this century prohibits redlining. This denying of credit to credit-worthyperson because of the zip code area he or she resides in is not only unlawful, it is not at all ethical.

The Statewide Coalition on Redlining is already gaining support to pass a package of legislation that will make discrimination determination because of geographic location illegal. About 20 legislators have endorsed the bill, and four have signed on for a related effort.

The new legislation would apply to insurance as well as home mortgages. It is impossible now for people in parts of Detroit to get insurance on their homes, cars or even auto.

The crucial of the redlining question is the role or responsibility of real estate institutions. That is the major issue of redlining. New law is called the practice of discrimination, where the money deposited in one neighborhood bank is invested in other areas. In 1994, a major study of the money was needed for home improvement loans, discrimination policies contribute to the creation of slums, to the delay of the neighborhood.

The question is one of social responsibility and economic responsibility; does the bank have the moral obligation to invest in their own neighborhood, even if it involves a higher interest? Does the only bank have to only its shareholders, and always should it involve investments that will only the highest return? The banks do have a social responsibility.

Local area bankers have made a last-ditch effort to save themselves by forming a "self-regulating" committee to handle complaints about redlining, but we can't help but pause, leaving their option to themselves by letting a minor well-meaning child a cookie jar.

Harker, we need strong state legislation that will give us the right to redline, not by delay. Action is also a must on the part of the Senate's Banking and Financial Services Task Force on Redlining, whose report last month suggested innovations like a mortgage package.

Economic institutions do have a more than a money making responsibility. It is about time they were forced to face that fact.

Nation urgently needs new energy policy

President Carter's proposals to deal with the natural gas shortage are necessary, but they barely scratch the surface of the energy problem. With particular regard to nuclear plants by oil companies and utilities.

Real or restricted shortages of natural gas have brought hardship to many states during this unusually severe winter. Congress should pass an energy bill next week, which will give states the ability to transfer natural gas to areas with the worst shortages, thereby helping to fill the gaps in services to top priority customers—residences, emergency public services and factories.

In addition, we believe that the oil companies should be made to reveal their efficiencies to degrees during the year, and even lower at night. Such measures are necessary for the time, but of minimal value during the quieter months. That is why we recommend to foreign energy sources—primarily oil—grows more with each passing day.

In 1976, we found that the total was an oil, dangerously unreliable figure that appears certain to rise in 1977.

Our energy resources are composed by the scandalmakers and the fear mongers. We must control oil and gas production and distribution, and we must be prepared to deregulate at the price of our energy policy.

One can only speculate how genuine the short-term is. We hope the situation does not worsen. We hope that the lack of energy policy.

The President and Congress should work to develop alternate, renewable energy sources, to oversee the comprehensive national energy program that go se the American consumer.

Economy false boom

WASHINGTON — A Treasury Secre- tary Mills, I believe, is to act on the fact that the financial stability of the Western world is "slowly" and that the government is prospering in this period of 15 years.

An official of the International Monetary Fund said that he was concerned about the safety of the world economy and that the United States and the United Kingdom were heading toward a depression. The government has been very concerned about the possibility of a depression.

"The government of the United States has been acting as if it was in a depression," the official said. "We believe that the situation is dangerous and that we need to take action." The official added that the situation was dangerous and that we need to take action.

"Every now and then, I get interested in administration. I don't want any part of it," Dorothy Arata, assistant professor of undergraduate education, referenced.

Arata assumed her position in February of last year as an assistant professor of undergraduate education at MSU. Arata, however, is also an associate professor of education at the Lansing Public Schools and has been chair of the Policy Board overseeing the various departments and groups that make up the Lansing Public Schools.

Arata's mother, Clementine, has been her mentor throughout her lifetime.

"When I was a little girl, my mother would say, 'You're going to be a professor,'" Arata said. "And I would say, 'That's very nice.'"

Arata believes that her mother's always been a role model for her, and she said she will continue to serve as a model for the students at MSU.

Arata said her skills include teaching, administrating, research and working with community members.

Arata said she doesn't think she's done anything special, but she said she's always been interested in administration.

"I've never been a shy person," Arata said. "I've always been interested in administration."

Lansing Catholic Priest Father Joseph S. Boudinot False was found guilty of 12 counts of sexual molestation of children. He will serve a sentence for each count, but it is not clear how long those sentences will be.

Boudinot is expected to appeal the decision. The case was tried without a jury and will be appealed directly to the Michigan Supreme Court. The appeal process could take up to two years.

The case involving Boudinot is one of several recent sexual abuse cases involving priests in the Catholic Church. The Diocese of Lansing is currently investigating several allegations of sexual abuse.

THE BEST PORNOGRAPHIC film of 1976

"Through the Looking Glass," not to be confused with "Alice in Wonderland," is a first run engagement. "Through the Looking Glass" is a beautiful, erotic film and that's not just our opinion...

"A major achievement for Pornography... a story of sexual disintegration... grips you right to the core. Catharine Burgerson is in her most spectacular beauty in pornography." - Al Goldstein

"A WORK OF ART . . . a film beyond space and time where nothing is forbidden and everything is permitted." - Hustler

After six months of research and study, the final report of the Center for Urban Housing Alternatives is released.

The center was started in 1973 by six people interested in East Lansing housing issues. The Center for Urban Housing Alternatives was founded to address the needs of the local community by offering research, training, and consultation services.

The report includes a comprehensive analysis of the housing crisis in East Lansing and recommendations for addressing it. It also includes case studies of successful housing projects and strategies for implementing change.

The center plans to continue its work by providing ongoing support to local groups and individuals interested in housing issues.

The center is funded by grants and donations and is based in the Charles University Center Building.
Spring lambs are early this year. Well — it’s this way every year to be ready for MSU’s annual Memorial Day Lamb sale and spring term animal husbandry classes.

CLASSICAL GUITAR seems to be the right tool for the First Amendment. American musical history is a memory of Bach with a guitar. Peter Vass, director of the School of Music at Michigan State University, is the first to admit it. Vass, a musicologist, says the guitar has developed into a versatile instrument.

"The guitar is the instrument that people use to express themselves," he says. "It has been used by composers such as Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven.

It is an instrument that can express a wide range of emotions and moods." Vass believes that the guitar is an important tool for teachers and students.

"The guitar is a great teaching tool," he says.

"It can be used to teach students about music theory, history, and composition." Vass also believes that the guitar is a great way to introduce students to music. "The guitar is a great way to introduce students to music," he says. "It is an instrument that can be played by people of all ages." Vass believes that the guitar is a great way to introduce students to music. "The guitar is a great way to

Scholar criticizes Gandhi rule

By ED LUSH

State's chief rhetor, John Gill, was not impressed by "reasonable" comments made by India's prime minister, Indira Gandhi. Gill stated that he did not think an emergency could be justified in India's case.

"I believe the government has failed to respond to the criticism they have received," Gill said. "I believe they are failing to keep their promises and are not being consistent in their actions."

Gill said that the Emergency legislation developed by Gandhi and her cabinet was not sufficiently diluted by amendments. Gill noted that not all amendments that have been proposed have been implemented. He also stated that the government has not been transparent in its actions.

Gill said that the emergency rule was not necessary and that it was not fair. He added that the emergency rule was a violation of the constitution and that it was not a good solution to the problems faced by the government.

Gill concluded by saying that he did not think the position of the outside world was strong enough to force India to withdraw the emergency rule. He said that the United Nations should have been more active in its criticism of the government's actions.

In his letter, Gill wrote, "I believe the government is not doing enough to address the problems faced by the country. I believe that the emergency rule is not only ineffective, but also harmful to the people of India."

Gill's letter was published in The Detroit News, a local newspaper in Michigan, on January 29, 1977.

XEROXING PICTURES FROM OWN FACES

Students starting new craze

By NANCY JUBALE

Despite being known for his work in Librarians, some students have been making copies with Valentine's Day precepts - copies of their own faces on Xerox machines.

The first trick in the process is to find a copy machine that won't copy people. One the graduate student, said Charlie Soriano, owned one student who introduced him to the process.

"You look around and make sure no one is looking," he said. "Then you put a stick in the machine, close your eyes and press you face against the glass."

The results are fantastic, he said.

"Your nose is dirtied and a beard-like you're trying to hold your breath," he said.

Soriano and his friends, most of whom decided to comment on their action, have their pictures hang up in their room.

But Kathy Trego, a junior majoring in audiology and speech sciences, plans to use her copies as a Valentine's Day present.

"For a ticket you can't beat it," she said.

Some students agree that the process may be dangerous because of the intense light the machine emits. But health officials disagree with this argument.

Dr. Arnold Ventnor of University Health

Center said the damage is not harmful as long as you keep your eyes closed.

Edward Carter, 28, physics professor, said the effect depends on the machine used.

"If the machine emits ultraviolet light it may be harmful," he said.

But the machine which Soriano and his friends use is the Xerox Library copy machine which is privately not ultraviolet, Carter said.

Dr. Marcy McElroy, on East Lansing eye doctor, said even intense light would be dangerous.

"You put your face in a red light beam," he said. "Even people who have been exposed to intense light can be uncomfortable with light casting on their eyes.

But before more people start running over to the Library, they should consider the same questions of being hurt over a Xerox machine.

"A friend of my boyfriend," Trego said.

"I think both ways, put his head down each people grabbed one another. She didn't want to see that he see because he was so em-tional.

Now comes Miller time.
