

Deals were cut with other 'U' coaches

Though both were employed elsewhere during the past season, former assistant MSU football coaches Jimmy Raye and Bill Davis continued to draw salaries from the university during the past year. At least one member of the board of trustees serving the time was unaware of the arrangement.

Raye's salary of $17,325 and Davis' $18,000 combined with the $31,125 three-year contract former head coach Denny Stolz inked just prior to his resignation last March brings the total amount MSU is paying former coaches employed in other jobs to $120,894.

The monetary arrangement for the two coaches stemmed from a 1976 apparent request from MSU President Clifton R. Wharton Jr., that the entire grid staff sign contracts following a three-year probation imposed by the NCAA last year. Payment from MSU for Raye and Davis ceased at the end of the past season.

Davis, currently assistant linebacker coach with the NFL Philadelphia Eagles, verified that MSU was paying him his entire $18,000 salary until last Jan. 14, despite his current job.

"The Eagles created a position for me and made financial arrangements for me," Davis said by phone from Philadelphia.

"But MSU would have paid me regardless if I worked or not, according to the contract I signed," he said. "In fact, I could have signed on with the Eagles at full salary and MSU would still have paid me."

"We were guaranteed at the time we signed the contract (March 1976) that we would be paid regardless of whether or not we got another job."

Raye, a star quarterback at MSU during the 1960s, said he received the same treatment after leaving East Lansing for a coaching job at the University of Wyoming.

"Yes, I was paid my full salary by MSU while I was at Wyoming," Raye said Sunday from Austin, Tex., where he is now an assistant coach at the University of Texas.

Raye, who joined the Wyoming staff in September, ironically returned to East Lansing for the Sept. 18 clash between the Cowboys and Spartans.

He added that he would have been paid his entire MSU salary of $17,325 regardless of whether or not he accepted the $21,000 post at Wyoming.

Meanwhile, former Trustee Warren M. Huff, D Plymouth, expressed surprise over the continued payments to both Raye and Davis.

"I was aware that we cut a deal with Denny (former MSU head coach Denny Stolz) who is currently on the MSU payroll while coaching at Bowling Green State University in Ohio, but I didn't know we had made a deal with the assistant coaches," he said.

Huff added, "We didn't have the formal contract with the coaches as we do now."

However, MSU Placement Director Jack Shingleton, who served as acting athletic director following the removal of Burt Smith from that position, said the administration asked that the coaches sign contracts.

"At the request of President Wharton, Denny and myself approached the coaching staff regarding formal contracts sometime last year following the extension of the coaches contract in February and before Denny's resignation in March.

"We asked all the coaches to sign a contract, and they all did," Shingleton said.

Davis, meanwhile, said he recalls that the coaching staff had made a pact among themselves to either all sign or all refuse the contract. "As far as I know, everybody signed, but only after provision 11 was deleted," Davis said.

"That provision stipulated that in case the head coach was released, fired, resigned or whatever, then we would only be paid for 60 days instead of the entire length of the contract. We objected to that provision and eventually it was taken out of the contract."

Shingleton said he could not recall provision 11 nor its removal from the proposed contracts offered the coaches. "I can't tell you exactly what was in the contract," he said. "I just don't recall."

Both Wharton and University Atty. Lee Carr failed to return State News phone calls Monday inquiring about the matter.

Earlier, Carr had said that a copy of Stolz' 1976 contract would be available in Secretary to the Trustees Elliott Ballard's office. However, Ballard said he did not know the whereabouts of the pact. Ballard on Monday denied knowing about the contracts for the assistant coaches.

"No, I haven't seen a copy of the contracts. I don't know where they are. You're talking to the wrong guy," he commented.

None of the remaining members of Stolz' staff were in the same position as were Raye and Davis. Andy MacDonald left MSU last March for an assistant's job with the Seattle Seahawks; Charlie Butler was recently hired as an assistant by Stolz at Bowling Green; Howard Weyers was released from the Spartan staff by the trustees last Feb. 20; and Ed Youngs remained out of coaching during the 1976 season.

Meanwhile, Sherm Lewis, Ron Chismar and Dan Underwood were retained on the Spartan staff by current head coach Darryl Rogers.

Reading crisis fault of teachers, MSU prof says

By PATRICIA LeCROIX
State News Staff Writer

Against the issue of the reading problems of elementary and secondary students has been, this time, with teachers being labeled the cause of the problem.

Attributing the current reading problems to "an attitude on the part of the teachers," Romano, MSU professor of administration and higher education, said he feels "very strongly" that teachers could solve many of the problems by readjusting their ideas toward "Teachers don't realize that teaching reading should be part of every subject," he said. "They take the attitude that they want to teach science or social studies alone."

He explained that this negative attitude toward reading is partially due to lack of courses taken by the teachers while in college. The right type of courses, he said, instruct elementary teachers in the proper means to teach reading skills.

He compared the current problems in teacher attitude and students' reading to a "self-fulfilling prophecy."

"Approximately 25 per cent of the elementary education population are currently having reading problems," Romano said. "The data becomes more astronomical when you look at the figures for minority students in the ghettos."

Standardized tests indicate there currently is an eight-year range in reading abilities in the classroom, he said. This means that in an eighth grade room, there are students at the fourth grade up to the twelfth grade level.

Carter chooses admiral to head intelligence unit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adm. Stansfield Turner, a Naval Academy classmate of President Jimmy Carter, will be nominated to head the Central Intelligence Agency, the White House announced Monday.

Turner, 53, is commander-in-chief of U.S. forces in southern Europe.

Asked why Carter chose Turner, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said, "The major reason is his (Carter's) feeling this is a person who has his complete trust."

Powell said Carter feels the admiral "is eminently qualified for this position with a broad background academically and militarily."

He said Carter did not know Turner well at the academy but did remember meeting him, and recalled: "He was so far ahead of the rest of us no one was even jealous of him."

Powell said that as far as he knows, Turner will retain his military commission and remain on active duty. He said the deputy director of the intelligence agency will be a civilian.

In recent years, the director of the CIA has been a civilian, while the deputy director has been a military officer. By law, military officers cannot fill both the No. 1 and No. 2 spots at the CIA, an agency spokesperson said.

Powell said he believes Carter has spoken with a number of members of Congress about Turner in the past few days.

The spokesperson said the President is convinced that Turner will be able to divorce himself from his Naval orientation in the intelligence field.

Powell said he could not comment on whether a concern over the Soviet Union's naval buildup played a role in Carter's choice of a naval officer for the CIA job.

Powell said Turner's nomination will be sent to the Senate "within the next day or so."

Swine flu issue still causes confusion

Epidemic not likely,
Scientists theorize
studying viruses

some animal. The marriage produces a virus against which there probably is no natural body defense.

Their findings indicate that the New Jersey swine virus was not any such recombination of viruses.

By current theory, "we concluded that the New Jersey 'swine' virus was an unlikely candidate for the next influenza epidemic," said Drs. Peter Palese, Jerome L. Schulman and Mary B. Ritcher of the Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York City.

They said they "couldn't predict with certainty" that the New Jersey swine virus couldn't be the strain that might launch a great epidemic. "But we can say it is less likely to be" than originally feared, they told the Tenth Gustav Stern Symposium on Perspectives in Virology.

Their findings become known last summer to scientists who were deciding whether to go ahead producing swine flu vaccine. Those making that go-ahead decision "felt it justified" because of uncertainties, partly concerning the theory that human-animal viruses must recombine to fire off an epidemic, they said.

In another report Monday, Dr. Peter C. Doherty of The Wistar Institute in Philadelphia told of new findings concerning one major system of body defense against viruses or bacteria.

This is known as cell-mediated immunity, coming from secretions of "T" cells from the thymus gland. The other main defense is antibodies, particles that physically latch on to the invading organisms to neutralize them.

The circulating "T" cells actually kill cells infected by virus.

Experts calling for end to moratorium on flu vaccinations

WASHINGTON (AP) — A panel of experts summoned to Washington because of an outbreak of A-Victoria flu in Florida recommended Monday that the nationwide moratorium on flu vaccinations be lifted immediately.

The nation has 27 million doses of A-Victoria vaccine on hand — all already mixed with swine flu vaccine. The swine flu vaccine has been linked with an increased threat of Guillain-Barre syndrome, a rare but occasionally fatal form of paralysis.

The 20 medical experts and scientists made their recommendation to Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano, Jr., after an all-day meeting.

Califano, who sat in on the final two hours of the panel's deliberations, said he hoped to make a decision today about lifting the moratorium.

The experts did not write down their recommendations or vote on a course of action. However, there was consensus on these points:

- The moratorium should be lifted on the combined vaccine with the committee recommending that the elderly and those with chronic diseases get shots. Particular attention should be given to those in institutions.

- The combined vaccine should be made available without recommendation to anyone in the population. This would permit people who want the shots to get them.

- The moratorium on the vaccine for Hong Kong-B Flu, a less severe strain that primarily infects children and young adults, should be lifted, returning it to its previous status of being available from private doctors. This moratorium was placed as a precaution after swine flu was linked with the paralysis.

- No decision will be made at present on whether the moratorium on the pure strains of swine flu vaccine should be lifted.

If Califano adopts the recommendations, it will be up to state and local health officials to decide whether they want to resume mass immunization programs in their areas or simply make the combined vaccine available on demand.

The national flu immunization program was suspended in December when an apparent statistical link was discovered between flu vaccinations and the rare paralytic illness.

The flu program concentrated on immunizing people against A-New Jersey influenza, more commonly known as swine flu.

Israel impatient with Syrian troops

Israeli Foreign Minister Yigal Allon said Monday his country has only limited patience waiting for the United States to get Syria to pull back troops in Lebanon now eight miles from the Israeli border. Allon expressed his impatience as United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim arrived in Lebanon on his Mideast tour to reactivate the Arab-Israeli peace talks in Geneva.

The top UN official denied any intention to compete with American efforts to get Israel and the Arab countries back to the negotiating table this spring. "On the contrary, the United Nations is cooperating and coordinating with the cosponsors of the Geneva conference," Waldheim said at a news conference on arrival from Saudi Arabia.

U.S.S.R. launches Soyuz 24

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union launched a space ship with two men aboard Monday to continue experiments with the orbiting space station Salyut 5, the Tass news agency announced. Tass said all systems aboard the Soyuz 24 spaceship were functioning normally and the crew, identified as the commander, Col. Viktor Gorbatko, and flight engineer Lt. Col. Yuri Glazkev, had started carrying out their flight program. The purpose of the launching, the agency reported, was "to continue scientific-technical studies and experiments with the orbital station Salyut 5 started on July 7th last year during the joint flight of the transport ship Soyuz 21 and the station Salyut 5."

W. German nuclear talks postponed

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Washington talks on West Germany's planned export of sensitive nuclear technology to Brazil have been postponed until early next week, informed sources said Monday. The sources said the delay is due to technical reasons. Foreign Ministry Under-Secretary Peter Hermes and his counterpart in the Research Ministry, Hans-Hilger Haunschild, earlier had been scheduled to leave for Washington at the end of this week to discuss the agreement with President Carter's administration. The U.S. government wants to prevent German construction of a nuclear fuel processing system in Brazil for fear the equipment could help the Brazilians build atomic bombs. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has refused to cancel sensitive aspects of the June 1975 agreement with Brazil, though he is prepared to accept "additional obligations" to block spread of nuclear weapons.

Report shows unemployment figures

WASHINGTON (AP) — Between 1.2 million and 1.57 million persons — most of them in Ohio and New York — have been laid off their jobs because of the natural gas shortage, new federal and state reports indicate. A report given White House energy adviser James R. Schlesinger over the weekend shows gas-shortage unemployment in at least 17 states, ranging from about 1,000 each in Mississippi and Wisconsin to an estimated 250,000 in New York and 550,000 to one million in Ohio. The report is based on estimates prepared by the Commerce Department and by state agencies. The memo said weather forecasters anticipated some easing of the cold wave this week but warned that freezing Arctic air would probably return "for at least the following two to three weeks."

Postal Service may ask for rate hike

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The head of the Postal Service says the organization may ask for authority to raise rates by an unspecified amount in 1978. Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar told the Comstock Club on Sunday that the increase probably would be requested despite the fact that the Postal Service had a $69.8 million operating surplus in the fourth quarter of 1976. It was the second consecutive quarter that the Postal Service had a surplus. Bailar said he did not expect any increase in postal rates during 1977 but said additional income will be needed in 1978.

Weather Service warns of flooding

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Weather Service warned Monday that a sudden break in the severe winter weather in the next month or two could trigger flooding in the eastern portion of the nation. Robert M. White, administrator of the weather service, said that the danger is the result of the heavy freezing of rivers and lakes and thick snow cover in some areas. A sudden thaw would trigger large runoffs of water, while the ice in the rivers could congest into dams backing up the water. The Weather Service identified as areas with the highest flood potential the basin that drains into Lake Erie and Lake Ontario; the area served by tributaries of the Ohio River in western New York, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; and communities on the mainstream of the Ohio south to Cincinnati.

State unemployment rate soars

DETROIT (UPI) — Michigan's unemployment rate soared to 9.7 per cent in January, but state Employment Security Director S. Martin Taylor still found encouragement in the figures. The jump from 9.2 per cent in December was caused mostly by seasonal layoffs in the construction industry and the loss of Christmas season jobs in retail establishments. Taylor said the increase, which hit 10 per cent in the Detroit area, is normal for this time of year and actually was less than the average.

Three counties may join aid list

LANSING (UPI) — Three more Michigan counties hammered by recent heavy snows may join a list Monday that already contains 11 counties declared federal emergency areas by President Jimmy Carter during the weekend. A team of federal disaster assistance specialists met with state officials throughout the weekend and set up an office in the local Post Office building to start the federal aid program. A spokesperson for Gov. William G. Milliken said Berrien, Muskegon and Newaygo Counties may be added to the list Monday following a review of conditions by the State Police Emergency Services Division, the state coordinating agency advising the governor.

Ford gives Yale lecture

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Eighteen days out of the White House, Gerald Ford returned to Yale on Monday, regretting his failure to meet Alexander Solzhenitsyn in 1975, praising Harry Truman and walloping Congress for "encroaching" on the conduct of foreign affairs.

Students who lunched with him said he also warned that South Korea could become a "congressional Watergate" because of charges that several congressmen received cash gifts from that government. He criticized the press for not pursuing the South Korean story as hard as it did Richard Nixon's Watergate.

For Ford personally, his return to the frozen groves of academia as a guest lecturer reflected a spectacular rise in status. He graduated Yale Law School 36 years ago in the middle of his class. Today he was hailed as Yale's "most distinguished alumnus" by university President Kingman Brewster. That covers a wide field — about 250,000 graduates since 1701, including one other U.S. President (William Howard Taft) and a long string of Cabinet members, Supreme Court justices, business leaders and poets.

The 38th president began his career as a college lecturer in a high-ceilinged gothic hall filled with 250 students from the "History 32B" class, a course in American foreign policy in the 20th century. He made no speech but took questions. He was applauded warmly on entering and leaving.

In response to questions, he said it was "regrettable" that he did not receive Solzhenitsyn in the Oval Office.

"We thought it might have been a policy problem," he said. "In retrospect it would have been wiser for me" to meet with the Russian writer, a Nobel Prize-winner who symbolized dissent within the Soviet Union.

The former president indicated his support of the Carter Administration's public criticism of Russia's treatment of Andrei Sakharov and other dissidents.

"The Sakharov issue is a legitimate issue that ought to be raised" in view of human rights agreements reached with the Russians in Helsinki in 1975, Ford said.

He mentioned his successor by name only once and that was to say he was "delighted with President Carter's appointment of Elliot Richardson" to represent him at the Law of the Sea Conference. Richardson, who has held more Cabinet posts than anyone in American history, was Ford's secretary of commerce.

Asked which previous presidents served as his "positive and negative models" in foreign affairs, Ford lauded Truman for his "affirmative role" in Korea and western Europe. Smiling as the students laughed, he said, "I'd rather not get into" the negative side of the question.

Ford said American motives were "right" in Vietnam but gently chided Presidents Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon for not making "better" military and economic decisions there.

Spain may restore ties with Soviets

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The Spanish government is about to establish diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union for the first time since the Spanish Civil War in the 1930s, a high government source said Monday.

An announcement in Madrid of relations with Moscow is expected after cabinet approval, perhaps today, the source said.

Premier Adolfo Suarez has called a cabinet session today, but the premier's office said it would not comment on whether the matter of relations with the Soviet Union was on the agenda.

Gen. Francisco Franco, Spain's right-wing ruler until his death 14 months ago, refused to have relations with the Soviet Union after winning the civil war in 1939. Franco led an army rebellion in what he called his "crusade against Communism" to start the war in 1936.

Spain first established diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union on July 28, 1933 under the Republican government then in power.

After Franco defeated the Republicans in the war, his new government ignored the Soviet Union and all Communist states.

One big stumbling block to relations was an estimated $1 billion in Spanish gold that the Republican government sent to the Soviet Union during the civil war.

The government source said the new agreement for relations with Moscow makes no mention of the gold, which the Soviet Union claims was in payment for military hardware it supplied to Republican forces during the civil war.

Former President Gerald Ford met with students Monday morning for breakfast in Timothy Dwight College at Yale University. Ford will also speak before a history class during his two and one-half day stay at Yale.

Black guerillas murder 7 Catholic missionaries

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Seven white Roman Catholic missionaries, including four nuns, were lined up and shot in a guerilla attack that stunned Christian church groups in Rhodesia and brought an expression of "profound grief" from Pope Paul VI.

Officials said it was the worst group killing of whites in four years of war by black guerillas against Rhodesia's white government.

The one survivor of the shooting said three German Dominican nuns, an English Dominican nun, two Jesuit missionaries from Germany and a lay brother from Ireland were executed inside the compound of their mission school north of Salisbury on Sunday night by guerillas who argued about who would do the shooting.

"They did not say one word about why they were doing this to us," said Father Dunstant Myerscough, an English Jesuit who said he threw himself to the ground when the guerillas opened fire. "When one of the sisters asked what they wanted, one of them said, 'We want our country.'"

Rhodesian police said they collected 111 empty cartridges from Soviet-made machine guns at the shooting scene, the Catholic Masumi mission in lush, hilly country 36 miles northeast of the Rhodesian capital.

A telegram sent by the Vatican to black Archbishop Patrick Chakaipa of Salisbury said Pope Paul "prays for peace and justice to be re-established in all regions afflicted by these atrocious crimes."

Archbishop Chakaipa called the guerilla attack an "evil act" which made a "mockery of whatever good ideals they claim to serve."

Father Myerscough said 12 guerillas gathered him and the seven others on a sandy road running through the mission compound, then seemed to argue about who should kill them.

"One came forward and then withdrew another did the same. Eventually three forward and the others ran off. They raised guns and opened fire."

Another white nun, 74, had been ordered her room but fell when a guerilla pushed through the door. She said he left her after she told him she had arthritis and could move quickly. "Later I heard the shooting," she said.

Father Myerscough said the intruders black nuns and staff members at the mission. "They just seemed interested in round the Europeans," he said.

John Potter, police superintendent in the area, contended the attackers were members of the outlawed Zimbabwe African National black nationalist movement "under the control of Robert Mugabe."

Mugabe is a black nationalist leader whom Prime Minister Ian Smith has negotiated a transition to black majority rule in Rhodesia. Smith contends Mugabe has Soviet backing.

Potter said he doubted the guerillas would be ordered to kill the missionaries. "They seem to do their own thing," he said. "They want to burn down villages, that they will do."

Twelve missionaries have been killed in Rhodesia in the last two months, including German Catholics shot by a black guerilla miles south of Salisbury in December. Last month, a Methodist minister and his wife were killed by government forces who said they accidentally wandered into an ambush of guerillas.

The Roman Catholic church has 100 members in Rhodesia and runs more here than any other church. For years it has been critical of the country's white government and its racial policies.

VIOLATORS TO BE FIRMLY PENALIZED

Bill defines eviction policy

By PAUL NOVOSELICK
State News Staff Writer

The first piece of tenant-sponsored legislation to clear the Michigan Legislature in over four years will take effect March 1 when the new state tenant-eviction bill becomes law. The legislation, introduced by Perry Bullard, D-Ann Arbor, defines what can be considered as legal and illegal eviction procedures, and provides stiff penalties for violations of the statute.

Signed into law by Gov. William G. Milliken on Oct. 27, 1976, the bill will become the first piece of tenant-rights legislation to pass the legislature since the Security Deposit Law of 1973.

It states that any person who is ejected or put out of any land or tenement in a forcible and unlawful manner is entitled to recover three times the amount of his actual damages or $200, whichever is greater, for each occurrence and, where possession has been lost, to recover possession.

Forcible eviction is not as bad in East Lansing as in poorer parts of the state, but occasionally happens here, said Roger Winthrop, coordinator for PIRGIM, a major lobbyist for the bill.

"The real problems lie in Grand Rapids and Detroit, where the living conditions are lower than those of East Lansing," he said. "Grand Rapids had over 100 forcible evictions last year alone."

A spokesperson for Tenants Resource Center of East Lansing said that data concerning the amount of evictions in East Lansing is incomplete, but that three such evictions occurred last week.

As the law now stands, if a landlord illegally evicts a tenant, there is no legal recourse except through court action. The bill would deter the landlord from illegal evictions through the payment of monetary damages.

"Even before the law, the landlord was supposed to go to court to get an order before eviction," Winthrop said. "So now, it'll at least cost the landlord some money if he doesn't." "Self-help evictions which are done without either a court order or just cause will be slapped with monetary damages," he said.

The following methods of eviction will be considered illegal, according to the bill:

- The use of threat of force;
- The removal, retention, or destruction of personal property of the tenant;
- A change, alteration or addition to the locks or other security devices on the property without providing keys or other unlocking devices to the tenant;
- The boarding of the premises which prevents or deters entry;
- The removal of doors, windows, or locks;
- Causing, by action or omission, the termination or interruption of a service which the landlord is under an existing duty to furnish to the tenant. Examples of these services are heat, running water, hot water, electric or gas service;
- Introduction of noise, odor or other nuisance.

The bill also stipulates those times when a tenant may be legally barred from his apartment:

- When the landlord acts pursuant to a court order;
- When the landlord is only temporarily interfering with the tenant to make needed repairs or inspection as provided by law;
- When the landlord believed in good faith that the tenant had abandoned the premises, and after diligent inquiry has reason to believe the tenant does not intend to return, and current rent is not paid.

The bill was supported by tenants' groups throughout the state, including East Lansing, Ann Arbor, Grand Rapids and Wayne County Tenant's Union. Even the Michigan Landlord's Association, which initially opposed the measure, gave its support after some gaps in the bill were closed.

"After the loopholes which would have presented undue hardships and harm to the landlord were closed, we supported the bill," said Gloria Fleming, legislative coordinator for the Michigan Landlord's Association. "Let's face it, it's a tenant protection bill and does nothing for the landlord, but it's a step in the right direction."

"There isn't a bill from here to Florida which benefits the landlord," she said. "It solves some of the tenants' problems, but does nothing for the landlords."

Increase in budget could solve problems of Mathematics Dept.

By SUZIE ROLLINS
State News Staff Writer

Overcrowded lecture halls, numerous unstaffed graduate assistants and a staffed help room for Math 108 are problems of the Mathematics Department that seem to have only one viable solution—more money.

The department could use more money for most of its teaching departments, said Clarence Winder, associate provost. "Almost every department can present strong justification that they would be effective if they had more money," he said. "About 5,000 students take Math 108 each year and the vast majority of them are graduate students."

An annual report submitted to the provost's office by the math department stated that it had staffing problems and a decreasing number of graduate assistants applying for positions.

"Winder said that compared to other departments of the American Association of Universities (Big Ten colleges), the MSU faculty is carrying a 20 per cent load in the amount of hours they spend in the classroom."

The entire math department is currently operating on a $2.3 million budget, according to Joseph Adney, chairperson of the Mathematics Department. The breakdown follows:

• Salaries: About $2.2 million was allocated to salaries of faculty, staff, graduate assistants and undergraduate assistants.

• Stipends: Approximately $10,900 was allocated for wages earned by students in recitation instructors, help room assistants who don't teach regular sections, graders and mini-lectures which are given to 70 students each.

• Supplies and services: $79,000 was allocated for these items.

budgeted to cover fees for speakers from other Universities coming to MSU, travel to math meetings, telephones and carpentry, among other things.

• Equipment: $1,000 was allocated to cover expenses of typewriters, computers and other machines.

Also included in the annual report submitted to the provost's office is a budget request for the department for the upcoming academic year. After the request reaches the provost's office it is sent to the president's office and then to the board of trustees where the final request is made to the Michigan State Legislature.

"They (departments and colleges) have a budget request and can state their needs,"

Winder said. "If we think they made a well-documented pertinent request it is apt to be included in the budget request to the state."

Winder added that MSU protected the College of Natural Resources which the math department is a part of, as much as possible from budget reductions.

"The solution that would be the best for all concerned would be if the state would provide additional funds," he said. "If the state of Michigan would supply the same amount to MSU as it does to the University of Michigan per student we would receive $830 more per student. Compared to Wayne State University we would receive $650 more per student," he said.

International courses offered at 'U' studied for interest ingredient

By ED LION
State News Staff Writer

The International Studies Center is conducting a study to see if MSU offers an adequate curriculum of international courses to cultivate student interest. However, some MSU professors say disinterest in international courses may be the fault of the student — and not the curriculum.

The study is being conducted by Barb Johnson, a James Madison College senior, in conjunction with the Institute of Comparative and Area Studies.

Johnson plans to interview about 20 faculty members from across the University and ask them if they perceive any deficiencies in the international offerings. This data will be collated, she said, and used in tandem with an international course catalog being compiled by the institute to make recommendations on where improvements can be made.

"We live in an ever-shrinking world with much interdependence," said Iwao Ishino, the Comparative Studies Center director. "It's important for us to learn and know how others live, so I think international studies are extremely important in giving students a well-rounded education."

He said the center is doing all it can to promote international courses, including the publication of a handbook of MSU's international programs which can be picked up at the International Center.

But generally speaking, he said, he has discerned a decline in interest over the past few years in international courses. This can be attributed to more political apathy prompted by the end of the Vietnam War and the poor job market which makes students more vocationally inclined, Ishino said.

"I think we may find that the University does offer an extensive array of courses, but the students aren't all that interested," he said.

Robert Boeder, a professor with the African Studies Center who offers a course on contemporary southern African affairs, said he thinks much of the disinterest lies with students.

"We have some of the best people lecturing on Africa and all we have in the class is 28 people," he said. "Five years ago I would expect it to be filled to capacity, which is about 300."

Boeder suggested that more international-flavored courses be incorporated into the general education classes so more students will be exposed to them.

"I would have to say that MSU does have a lot of international classes to offer," said C. Patric Larowe, economics professor. "But the students just don't give a damn."

The study was prompted by a request from Ralph Smuecker, International Studies Center dean.

MSU currently offers between 600 and 800 courses that have some international content, said a spokesperson from the Comparative Studies Institute. But most of these are language and humanities courses, he said.

Locks on MSU buildings slow down firefighters

By MICHAEL MACKSOOD
State News Staff Writer

On a weekday if there is a fire in any building on campus the East Lansing Fire Department will be there fighting the fire within minutes, but on weekends it may take a little longer.

From Friday night to Monday morning a large portion of MSU's 200 buildings are locked for security reasons.

The fire department does not have keys to open these buildings. In order for them to get into a locked building they must either break in or wait for someone to bring a key from the Department of Public Safety (DPS).

On Sunday the fire department received a report of a fire at the Student Services Building (the report turned out to be a false alarm). When the two fire engines and an ambulance showed up they found the building locked.

A student working on the third floor of the building looked out the window and a fireman signaled him down to open the door. When the student got there he found a fireman using pliers on the lock to try and get in.

East Lansing Fire Chief Phil Patriarche said "we don't carry keys to every building on campus, if we did we'd need a separate vehicle just to haul the keys."

Samuel Gingrich, fire safety officer for MSU, said the fire department at one time carried keys to some of the buildings on campus "but it got to the point that they had so many keys it would take them an hour just to find the right key."

"Normally the type of thing that happened Sunday is not a problem," Patriarche said. "Usually a fire is reported by someone in the building and they will meet us at the door."

Patriarche said that if firemen go to a building on campus they will break in if they see a fire or smoke but if they don't see any signs they are reluctant to break in.

"I realize there may be a problem if we can't see the fire in the building but in most cases someone from the DPS will meet us at the building with the key," Patriarche said.

Patriarche said in this case the DPS could have been tied up doing something else.

Gingrich said his main concern in situations like this is people inside the building being able to get out.

"The doors are locked of course for security reasons and it's pretty much up to the captain on duty if it is worth waiting for the DPS to bring the key or if they should do what they have to get in the building," Gingrich said.

Gingrich said the fire department does have keys to most of the mechanical rooms on campus. But these keys do not let them into the building.

There is no type of pass key available to the fire department which would allow them to get into the buildings. Gingrich said this is for security reasons.

He said if some type of pass key were made for the buildings on campus it could cause a big security problem if one of the keys were lost.

"So much of the time, nationwide, there is a tug-of-war between the police and fire departments," Gingrich said. "The police want buildings locked for security and the fire department wants them open for fire safety."

Like Gingrich, Patriarche said he does not see the fire department's lack of keys as a problem.

"We don't rely on keys, we rely on someone to be there," Patriarche said. "But if we've got to get in we will get in."

"It has never been a problem before (the lack of keys). There's always a chance that tonight it might be, but up to now this hasn't happened."

NO SUSPECTS IN CUSTODY

Four residents tied up, cash taken, police say

Two males held four East Lansing residents at gunpoint, tied them up and then fled with $371 in cash shortly before 1 a.m. Monday.

According to police reports, the two men entered a residence at 1172 Snyder Road and asked the occupants if they had any cash.

The man who answered the door said they didn't have any dope in the house and then one of the suspects pulled out a small caliber revolver that reportedly had a very worn butt, while the other searched the rest of the premises.

Each of the four residents were bound with available electrical cords and one man was reportedly kicked in the face, but was not seriously injured. The suspects fled the scene on foot in an unknown direction.

Able to free themselves, the victims called the police who came to the scene and found seven latent prints in the home.

The first suspect was described as a black male with a slim build. Approximately 21 years old, he was wearing a blue knit stocking cap and had braided hair which hung down to a green Army fatigue jacket. He was reportedly wearing tennis shoes.

The second suspect was described as a black male in his 20s with a stocky build and was approximately 5 foot 10 inches tall. He was wearing a short Afro with muttonehop sideburns and a blue knit stocking hat. The man was wearing a blue police-type jacket and Adidas tennis shoes.

The police have no suspects in custody at this time.

Seminar slated for Thursday

Developments in Affirmative Action will be discussed in a seminar on Thursday in MSU's Kellogg Center at 10 a.m.

The session is scheduled to attract approximately 100 members and guests of the Michigan Handicapped Association and Michigan Action Officials.

Topics to be discussed at the seminar will include civil rights legislation, equal employment opportunities, legislation affecting handicapped persons, legal interpretations and affirmative action in public education.

Speakers will include Charles W. Johnson, from the Michigan Department of Civil Rights and Willard Johnson, from the Michigan Commission on the Handicapped.

Will 'U' ever abolish sex discrimination?

After a steady flow of complaints by temporary and untenured women faculty over the last four years, the MSU Faculty Associates have recently filed a long-overdue suit charging the University with employment discrimination against female faculty members.

Mary Tompkins, president of the Affirmative Action Committee of the MSU Faculty Associates, said that affirmative action set a modest goal in the early 1970s to tenure 14.7 per cent of the women faculty members and only 12.7 per cent attained that status.

"Tenure ratio is lower for women, thus providing the University with a cheap source of instructional talent," Tompkins said.

Out of 490 women faculty classified as temporary employees by the University, 282 of them hold tenured positions. Since there are 2,255 temporary and tenured faculty positions at MSU, according to 1975-76 records, the remaining 1,765 are all temporary and tenured men.

The suit is demanding the University halt its practice of discriminating against female instructors by granting them the fringe benefits given to other employees. MSU would also be required to reimburse all female faculty members for back wages and benefits lost as a result of discriminatory practices.

In addition, the University would provide appropriate relief to place temporary female faculty members at levels where they would be treated equal to male counterparts holding comparable status.

The University is aware of these problems, yet, until the filing of the suit, it has chosen to remain oblivious to the problems incurred by sex discrimination.

However, discriminatory measures are not limited to temporary employees. Last April, the American Association of University Professors conducted an analysis of faculty salaries.

Female assistant professors at MSU without tenure were found to receive 14 per cent less in pay than males with the same qualifications. And tenured females received a pay rate 15 per cent higher than similar nontenured women while tenured males got only 1.38 per cent more than similar nontenured males.

Though the discrepancies and unmet goals disclosed in many studies are revealing, study after study becomes tiring when they are continually followed by inaction. The female faculty members should never have been forced to file the suit. Hopefully their rights will be recognized and MSU will once again be duly chastized.

FBI probe of women unethical

The recent disclosure that the FBI spent four years investigating and compiling derogatory information on women's liberation groups and women activists is more damning evidence of our government's contempt for the rights of its own citizens.

Moreover, the FBI's conclusion that women activists "in general appeared to be hippies, lesbians or from other far-out groups" indicates that the goal of the probe was to discredit the women's movement by perpetuating false and scurrilous stereotypes of its leaders.

Not that it was any of the FBI's business what types of people were involved in this or any other movement. Women's activists, of whatever political or social coloration, had and do have a clear right to express their views without fear of governmental intimidation. Such a concept is central to the well-being of a democracy.

It appears that the FBI — and J. Edgar Hoover in particular — never really understood this. Hoover was obsessed with the notion that those who openly expressed their dissatisfaction with some aspect of society — antiwar groups, civil rights activists, women's liberationists — were somehow subversive and bent on overthrowing the government. He never understood the importance of free dissent in a free society.

Under Hoover's reign, the FBI became synonymous with organized crime.

If recent history is any indication, none of the agents involved in this dirty business will have to pay for their misdeeds. Women's groups have a right to know which agents intruded on their affairs, and government has the responsibility to see that they are punished.

LETTERS To the Editor

What I don't think Jones or many other people know is that, in order to offer our members education beyond the classroom, programs called "Chapter Developments" are set up regularly by sororities. This is where a talk by Gay Council would come in. But something else Jones may not realize is that sororities and fraternities set up their calendars a term ahead of time, or at the beginning of each term to allow time to schedule speakers, programs, etc.

Therefore, when Jones came to Panhellenic Council, our chapter as well as others already had their calendars all scheduled for the term. So I'm sure if he is patient, in addition to my house, other Greeks will be getting in touch with him.

Lynnda Gruber
301 Charles St.

Not in vain

In response to Dan Jones' letter to the editor on Friday, I'd like to assure him that his visit to the Panhellenic Council office wasn't in vain.

Each week I receive a letter containing the minutes from Panhellenic meetings. The day I received his letter I relayed the information about Gay Council speaking to different chapters. The idea was received with enthusiasm. Just as Jones is ignorant of Greeks, we are of Gay Council.

Gadfly

The Corporation for Public Nonsense wishes to commend Robert F. Ruschman for his magnificent viewpoint Thursday. Ruschman has done more to relieve the present tedium in East Lansing than anyone else.

What a grand letter! How bloodcurdling! How demonic! And so unspeakably silly! For his bravery in the face of overwhelming modesty, I hereby present Ruschman with this month's Gadfly-of-the-Town Award.

Check the facts

This letter is in response to the article in the State News on Thursday on the "superiority of organic foods." I have seen articles of this type in the past and I am afraid that the argument presented is worthless. I have yet to meet anyone who would stand on the argument of the inherent superiority of organic foods. Rather, persons who are concerned about the stuffs they put in their gullet are doing it to protest the actions of mass food processing and the unnecessary additives used.

For instance, how about the guy who has to stand on a production line, wearing a protective suit and face mask to spray the loaf pans in a bread factory? How about the person who sprays his vegetables before he delivers them to market in order that they may retain their color a while longer? How about the preservatives used in foods to extend their shelf life (didn't these food processors ever hear of refrigerators)? So it's not what you might think you're getting in organic foods nutrition-wise, but what you know you're NOT getting.

One additional note: I believe Diane Place should recheck her facts on nitrosamines. From all I've heard or read, nitrosamines are nearly the most potent of the known cancer-causing substances. I should also like to make clear that these State News reporters should be responsible for checking the facts before they disseminate information that may be erroneous.

Remodeling

Congratulations on Provost Lawrence Boger's newly remodeled office. I am now confident that, should the need ever arise, I will be able to find his plush hideaway among all the other identically imposing workspaces on the fourth floor of the Administration Building. Incidentally, as a teaching assistant who is currently crammed into a small former classroom with 12 other graduate students, I have often wondered whether my measly desk and bookshelf provided the proper "focal point" so that students could find me when necessary. Some teakwood paneling, drapes and carpeting would help immensely. It wouldn't even have to be brand new.

Better yet, take the $17,000 (which, of course, it would cost to do the job right) and hire another associate professor in this or any other needy department. Or give four struggling graduate students half-time teaching assistantships for a year. Or give full-year tuition scholarships to 17 undergraduates. Or replace some of the equipment in this and other departments which has broken down or been stolen. Or do any of a myriad number of other things which would increase the quality and extent of education at MSU. As "chief academic officer" of the University, isn't this supposed to be Boger's primary concern?

Caution

In response to the editorial on Jan. 31, we may be legislating ourselves into a corner if we ban phosphates in detergents. A couple of years ago all children's sleepwear was required by law to be made of flame-retardant material. The labels on these garments warn against washing them in nonphosphate detergent — it seems that this would remove the flame-retardant property of the fabric.

Illusion

I understand Mark King's zest for quality education, as reflected in his letter on Friday. However, King has basically false assumption: the illusion of an in-depth education is guaranteed who enter the University, including who come unprepared.

Traditionally, a university selects the best qualified students to continue their quest for knowledge and pursue scientific research. The recent liberal admission policy offers them a second chance in making school deficiencies. I feel that the city is justified in allocating assistants for these preliminary courses such as in Math 108. It depends on serious-minded and motivated individuals who get the best out of it.

King's final remark concerning Oriental teaching assistants in the Mathematics Department is like an axe-haw against God. Math is a universal language and the translation it requires only the knowledge of King chooses to continue his elsewhere. I should warn him that Big Ten universities and major cities across the country, Oriental departments and other physical departments and other physical departments will have to face this fact: scapegoating Orientals to excuse in achievement. There is no cheap

As much as I am concerned about quality education, I am even more concerned about the fact that an individual higher learning cannot transcend people's deep-rooted prejudices. "Caucasian" people cannot transcend. This makes me very sad.

At the time this seemed short-sighted to me in view of the known environmental problems with phosphates. So if we now ban phosphates, the garment makers will have to start all over again with kids' PJs. I wonder if they are, or will be, using PBB materials to make them flame retardant, and if so, whether PBB can be absorbed through the skin?

VIEWPOINT: WAKING UP AMERICAN SOCIETY

The next mayor and 'The Construction of Madness'

By TIMOTHY A. GALUS

I certainly was glad to read Robert F. Ruschman's viewpoint in the State News Thursday. It's good to know that a man of such obvious intelligence and clear vision is running for the office of mayor.

It's very perceptive of Ruschman to see through Tom Hayden's clever disguise and spot him for the FBI agent that he surely must be. Now most people are of the impression that he spent the '60s getting his head smashed down South during the racial confrontation, later in the SDS and still later at the Democratic convention of '68 to try and wake up American society to what was really going on in this country. Isn't that just silly?

It is amazing the way these FBI agents will go to jail, spend years in trial courts and devote most of their lives just to build up a sufficient cover to come to East Lansing and mess up your day, isn't it?

And since Ruschman has discerned this, I'm sure he also has figured out by now that Captain Kangaroo is really a commie subversive sent here to undermine the psyche of our youth. I trust Ruschman and Spider-Man will see to this particular threat in the near future.

And all those zero-population growth people, well Ruschman, don't listen to them. What do they know of the exponential growth pattern of mankind? And why should we believe the warnings of all kinds of scholars like Rene Dubos or Roderick Nash? After all, we have Ruschman to interpret the Constitution for us and everyone knows that his interpretation of a 200-year-old man-made doctrine must surely supercede the laws of nature.

And why should we believe that the quality of life is better here than in India, where the population is already out of hand? That's never gonna happen here. After all, this is — AMERICA — land of the free and home of the brave; land of the endless frontier, John Wayne, the 20-cent hamburger and a good five-cent cigar.

Actually, reading Ruschman's letter, I couldn't help but get a mental picture of a lone figure, clad in a plaid tweed cape and matching deer-stalker cap, puffing away on a Meijer's meerschaum pipe, tromping around the alleyways of downtown Lansing mumbling "elementary, elementary" to his pet dog Watson.

But enough of such folly, back to the "greater issues." Ruschman is just too good for us here in Lansing. He shouldn't sell himself short, he deserves better. Remember sir: "The Marines are looking for a few good men."

I read Ruschman's viewpoint or twice at school. And I read it at home a few more times, bedtime now and I'm still thinking about it. I should be sleeping now but somehow my mind is on the irrational, uninformed against environmentalists humanists everywhere that actually had the audacity to sign name to. Knowing people thoughts like those are out running for office is enough to any sane man awake at night.

But I'm keeping the "viewpoint" have it all cut out and I'm using it as a bookmark in a text of mine. The text of that is "The Construction of Madness." Somehow I find that apropos.

Galus is a junior majoring in science.

Energy group provides info

By JEFF LEVINE

The energy crisis fact or fiction? On campus there is a group of people who are making others aware of it. The group, called ENTROPY, which stands for Energy Now and Tomorrow: a Results-Oriented Program for Youth, is located in E-37 McDonel Hall. Its main function is to provide energy-related information to consumers. "Regardless of what people think the energy crisis is, it's present," said Joseph Janeti, director. Janeti is a professor in the department of Urban and Metropolitan Studies at MSU and was responsible for getting the project under way two years ago. "The energy crisis is a problem that affects all of us," he added. "It is going to be here for a while, and everyone is going to have to share the load." Janeti currently has a staff of 20 members working out of the office in McDonel Hall. The staff is made up primarily of students, some of whom receive pay. Others receive credits under independent studies and there are still others who volunteer their time. Throughout the short time ENTROPY has been operating, Janeti has seen many staff members come and go.

"Some students graduate and go on to other environmental jobs, working either for the state or a corporation," Janeti said. "Environmental-related jobs will be important for at least the next five to 10 years, and companies are looking for people with some knowledge in the subject." Janeti says the environment is something that has become very important to the country now and with the interest in it growing, project ENTROPY becomes important. ENTROPY offers many services to the State of Michigan, including a newsletter which is sent out to persons on its mailing list. Also, a retrieval log is offered to teachers which includes reviews of books and films made available through the ENTROPY office.

ENTROPY has also developed free workshops for teachers which it conducts throughout the state. The workshops provide teachers with hands-on experience with some instructional activities and background information on energy issues. ENTROPY's workshop instructors construct devices utilizing wind and solar energy, evaluate their energy consumption, review sources and techniques and discuss how all these things can be used with students. "We will do anything we possibly can to get people more aware of the energy problems and how to fight them," Janeti said. "All they have to do is ask."

classes, but Romano said these special classes often do more harm than good. Once in them, the students' self concepts are utterly destroyed, he said. In addition, the students often do well in these classes and then, in a normal classroom situation, fall behind again because they cannot maintain the same pace as the other students. Elaine Cherney, head of the reading and studies skills program conducted in the Learning Resource Center at MSU, said most college students have difficulty in adjusting to the amount of reading that is expected of them after relatively lax high school assignments. Students may either be referred to the study skills program by their instructor or participate on a voluntary basis. In addition, students that do not perform up to a certain level in the orientation tests at MSU are told to enroll in a comprehensive English class before they may take the required American Thought and Language series.

reading problem. "Smaller classes are automatically assumed to bring about good results in teaching. This is a phony answer," he said. "They don't necessarily mean greater learning." The role of home life in the students' reading abilities is a strong one, Romano said. "The home has the responsibility of manifesting the students' likes of reading," he said. "It is important that the parents give their children an opportunity to talk about the books they are reading." The parents of school-aged children may also help by exhibiting their own positive feelings toward reading.

Romano said that while it is not an absolute fact that students with better reading abilities excel in school, the trend indicates that students with advanced reading abilities tend to perform at a higher level in all subjects.

FAKED HEALTH PROBLEMS

Director former 'patient'

By NANCY JO HALE
State News Staff Writer

Days of high unemployment, when job hunting has become a profession, it is noteworthy that some people can secure a job by accident, or by faking.

Holdman, director of the Clinical Simulation Center in the College of Osteopathic Medicine, did this when she filled in for her one day as a "fake patient." From this brief stint she has become a director of MSU's program in patient simulation.

While working toward a degree in guidance and counseling, Holdman received a graduate assistantship from MSU's Office of Educational Research and Development (OMERED). It was there that she developed a training program for simulated patients in handbook form.

In 1976 she received her degree and accepted the directorship of the College of Osteopathic Medicine. Holdman has worked with the colleges of Osteopathic Medicine, Human Services and Nursing contact her when they need simulated patients for their students.

There are about 100 "fakers" to choose from, most of whom are paid $5 or more an hour. She said she needs more people from outside the University in order to provide medical students with a variety of people.

Anyone who has acting or role-playing experience has a head start in being a simulated patient.

"There isn't a script," she said, "so it is important that a simulated patient be able to improvise." In a typical medical students are exposed to simulated patients in a series of interviews ranging from 10 to 20 minutes long. The instructor of a student watches or videotapes the interview, Holdman said.

What happens during the interview depends on what the student wants the student to learn. According to Holdman's manual, the interview may involve discussion to get to the point, a general physical, or identification of a patient's complaint.

Holdman needs someone to simulate upper respiratory problems. Holdman gives a student a list of symptoms they should use during the simulation. From there it is up to the student to make a diagnosis.

"A simulated patient can't think of an answer to the medical questions they can cover up by saying something like, 'I don't know what that has to do with anything' or, 'Why do you ask that?'" Holdman said.

Holdman, an MSU graduate student and simulated patient, thinks it's fun getting paid for being someone else. But the work is frequently portrays actual combines fact and fiction. "I do have some arthritis," he said, "so I can fake being arthritic. And I used to bowl so when they ask about me I can say, 'I go bowling every Wednesday with a team.'"

Simulated patients can offer medical students a chance to develop listening skills and learn how to draw things out of them, including feedback about their performance.

"Real patients have other needs to be attended to," she said. "They aren't as likely to give feedback."

After a simulation is over a medical student can get feedback from the simulated patient, a faculty member who has been observing, or often from a videotape recording of their performance.

Denise Rogers, a second-year medical student, said she has gained from simulated patients' feedback.

"Feedback lets you know how well you are relating and getting to the point in your questions," she said. "That feedback will help later on."

Holdman said the use of simulated patients aims at stressing the importance of a cooperative relationship between doctor and patient.

Doctors can and should do more than rush people through on a production line, she said.

Linda Farquhar, an MSU junior and simulated patient, witnessed medical students learning the importance of a cooperative doctor-patient relationship.

In one simulation she had to role play three visits to a doctor in front of a large group of medical students. The first visit was when she was 16 and pregnant. At 18, she came back to the doctor with physical problems and trouble with her marriage. At 19, in the midst of a divorce, she came back saying she needed shots.

"What most of the students didn't realize," she said, "was that by the third visit I had used the excuse of shots just to talk to someone."

"What they were supposed to learn is that doctors aren't just there to do physicals and prescribe. They are listeners as well as doers."

'Kong' killed by a director's meanderings

By BYRON BAKER
State News Reviewer

Now that much of the carefully engineered promotion and media capitalization surrounding its premiere have passed into memory, perhaps the Dino De Laurentiis 1976 production of "King Kong" can be fairly evaluated as to its own merits. It is the motion picture itself that is under scrutiny here, not the action of the publicists, nor the reputed $24 million cost nor even the arguable superiority of its famous and fondly remembered source. The new "King Kong" is simply not a very engaging piece of film entertainment. Primarily, it is flawed by a divergence of approaches: director John Guillermin is directing a love story; scenarist Lorenzo Semple Jr. is scripting a cynical, parodistic reworking of the original plot; and the art directors and special-effects technicians are designing a movie about a 40-foot ape. The major creative styles and ideas at work here are at odds, leaving an uncertain ambience — a pall of a sort — upon the film. John Guillermin's direction is generally low-key, in contrast to the traditional tone of a monster movie. The director is clearly fascinated by the "beauty and the beast" love angle of the tale, and he makes the horrific and adventure aspects secondary to the detailing of the love story's development and tragic denouement. This makes for a slowly told, almost reflective story of a gigantic gorilla's hopeless infatuation for a foolish young woman — which, as written by Lorenzo Semple Jr. and director by Guillermin, is as ridiculous as it may sound. The beauty-beast theme might have worked as a subtext, set in perspective of a rousing adventure tale with action and heroism, but this "Kong" does not have those redeeming elements. Semple's campy, basically insincere screenplay involves flat, tiresome caricatures: an unscrupulous oil company executive (played in a hammy, moustache-tugging manner by Charles Grodin), a gangly, inept young scientist (laconically enacted by Jeff Bridges) and a beautiful shipwreck victim named Dwan (portrayed by newcomer Jessica Lange, who apparently attended the Margaux Hemingway school of acting). If Guillermin takes the romance too seriously, Semple treats it too frivolously: he wallows in such silly Dwan-Kong exchanges as, "You goddam male chauvinist-pig ape!" There are gratuitous throwaway references to "Deep Throat," the growing peril to the environment, and other trendy topics scattered throughout the dialog. These appear to have been inserted to obscure the original ideas or insights in the scenario. Semple's contribution on no higher a plane than the anecdotal one-gag cartoons in slick magazines, a favorite subject of which has always been Kong mystique. Though Carlo Rambaldi has done quite a piece of work, all considered, in his design of Kong (he is often a far more overwhelming figure) the conception of the ape's character is faulty. Rambaldi, his American associate Glen Robinson make-up man named Rick Baker (who often found cause to ape suit) have mostly licked the problem of suspending audience's disbelief of the existence of a 40-foot ape, but doing, the monster has become too human. Kong's half-half-extinct gorilla face is somehow excessively eloquently postured, manlike movements seem regal, genteel. When Dwan enters the scene, there is no tension between save for the initial thrill of the encounter: the impression is given that this big ape is ... well, just a big ape, enamored his lady fair. Kong seems to have very little to do except over Dwan, and at one brief point, do easy battle with a le giant serpent. Guillermin, Semple and the technical wizard so unwilling to stoop to the tone of a more traditional movie, that the mood and action becomes subdued to the ennui.

Classics market offers maze of choices

By DANIEL HERMAN
State News Reviewer

When I spoke with Aldo Ceccato, the former music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra last fall, I suggested that he record some of the works of the German Romantic composer Max Reger. "Max Reger?" he said, "It would be impossible to sell more than a thousand recordings of anything Reger composed." This sentiment can be attested to by the not-so-curious lack of an available Reger discography. The general rule is that if a composer is not well known and represented with frequent concert performances, his works are not recorded. There are many exceptions, of course. Columbia Masterworks has issued many modern recordings and Nonesuch records has been instrumental in bringing many Baroque, Romantic and modern compositions to disc. There are also small companies, such as Louisville and CRI records, which specialize in recording modern music. But the basic problem encountered is that record companies prefer not to gamble and instead record the salable biggies: the Beethoven symphonies (19 complete versions have been recorded), Bach's "Brandenburg Concerti" (23 complete versions have been recorded), Brahms' symphonies (there are 10 recorded editions available with two more in the works) and so on. A perfect example is Leonard Bernstein's recording of Elliot Carter's "Variations for Orchestra," which has not sold enough recordings to pay for taping costs. Because the discography of well-known works grows daily, potential classical record buyers are faced with a glut of recordings, and the question "Which recording should I buy?" commonly arises. The answer to this question is clouded by the fact that each person has a different conception of what is "right." In general however, there are usually performances which can be suggested for those who have neither the time, money nor expertise to judge which recordings are a best buy. Also taken into consideration should be the fact that many people are attempting to build a record library and want to include good performances from many musical periods. Keeping these facts in mind, I have selected what I consider excellent recordings of works ranging from Bach to Arnold Schoenberg. No record collection can even start without Bach's "Brandenburg Concerti," and Raymond Leppard's version on Philips is without a doubt one of the best. Moving to the second B of the "three Bs," it is also necessary to have Beethoven's nine symphonies. As a set, Rudolph Kempe and the Munich Philharmonic on Seraphim are fine, or singly, it is impossible to go wrong with Toscanini's RCA Victor (bargain) recordings. Also of note is Guido Cantelli's moving performance of the Seventh Symphony on Seraphim. For the symphonies of Brahms I have always had a fondness for Toscanini's performances with the NBC Symphony on RCA Victor (finishing out the "three Bs"). Other works to have would include Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," performed by Pierre Boulez on Columbia; Schubert's 14th string quartet, "Death and the Maiden," on RCA Red Seal, performed by the Guarneri String Quartet; Hector Berlioz's "Symphony Fantastique" in a marvelous performance by Colin Davis on Philips; and Dvorak's Fifth Symphony (or his ninth by the old catalog), "From the New World," conducted by Bruno Walter on Odyssey. Also of interest to any music-lover is Dmitri Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony, performed by the composer's son, Maxim Shostakovich, on Angel. Other Russian favorites include Tchaikovsky's last three symphonies conducted by Yevgeny Mravinsky on Deutsche Grammophon; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" conducted by Bernard Haitink; and Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," "Petrushka," and "Firebird" suites conducted by the composer on Columbia. Finishing out the list are such works as Debussy's "La Mer," "Iberia," "Clarinete Concerto" and other works by the composer on Columbia conducted by Pierre Boulez; Gustav Mahler's First Symphony, "The Titan," conducted by Jascha Horenstein on Nonesuch; and Arnold Schoenberg's "Transfigured Night" on Odyssey, conducted by Dmitri Mitropoulos.

the composer on Columbia. Jim Harrison, the popular novelist and poet who has been compared to Hemingway, Henry Miller, James Dickey and Rabelais, will read from his works Wednesday at 4 p.m. in 114 Bessey Hall as part of the English Department's "Writers Reading" series. A native of Grayling and an MSU graduate, Harrison is noted for his Michigan imagery and subject matter. He recently completed a novel entitled "Farmer," an account of a middle-aged farmer's battle to choose between a young stu-

'Looking Glass' a peek at sophisticated fantasy

By BYRON BAKER
State News Reviewer

"Through The Looking Glass," a new film directed by Jonas Middleton ("Illusions of A Lady"), is fairly sophisticated fare for the sexually explicit film patron. Glossily designed and lushly photographed, the picture is ambitious in terms of its genre — perhaps overly so. This film is not merely an exercise in erotica; it sports an ambiguous theme, a dark investigation into the relationship of vanity to sexual fantasy. The erotic couplings are varied and myriad — as per any hard-core entry — but the picture never stops for 10 or 15 minutes to dwell upon a sexual encounter purely for its own sake, as is the norm. Rather, Middleton has attempted to integrate the many sex scenes into the evocation of his theme. It may not work very well — Middleton is not a particularly original stylist — but some of this is intriguing, and all is seriously executed. Catharine (played by Catharine Burgess, a physically lovely, if primarily inexpressive actress) is bored and neglected by her husband, and spends much of her time before an ornate antique oval mirror. She plays a sort of childhood game, fantasizing and experimenting sexually, when a seductive, strongly masculine presence beckons to her from within the glass. He invites her to join him in the strange world of the other side of the mirror. After some reflection, she makes her decision and becomes trapped in a desolate, nightmarish land. A brooding, weirdly-toned narrative, "Through The Looking Glass" is a studied, carefully distanced erotic film. It is not a typical explicit picture; Middleton has escaped the bane of sinking into easy ludicrousness. His message may be elusive, but his ability and serious intent is clear. The picture is being shown on campus by Beal Films.

Endless toil pays for Rudolph

By JOHN SINGLER
State News Sports Writer

From a young man whose score in his first gymnastics meet was 1.55, for anyone on the street and smile.

In the gymnasium, Rudolph found the adjustment, from a very regimented system in high school to Szyplu's more relaxed atmosphere, a trying experience.

"Coach Szyplu put up with a lot from me and we both gave a little. We've helped each other," Rudolph said. "In order to be coached by someone, you have to respect him."

Gymnasts must well be an afflicted lot, since Rudolph points out that nearly 75 percent of them are always hurt to some degree, yet the show must go on.

It was a chipped bone in Rudolph's wrist that limited his performance in the Big Ten championships last season. He hopes to improve his 12th-place showing and wants to be one of the top three all-arounders in grew up. "In the city, I was always looking out for myself," he said. "Here, you can say 'hi' to anyone on the street and smile."

"I'm having some trouble finding time and disciplining myself to practice compulsories. It's like reading a boring book," Rudolph said.

Rudolph competes in all events, but if he was inclined to specialize he would favor the parallel bars and the high bar, his favorite event. If there is an advantage to Rudolph's all-around game over other gymnasts, it would be the fact that he excels on the pommel horse, an apparatus other all-arounders find least enjoyable of the six events.

In his three years at MSU, Rudolph counts as his fondest memory of competition a meet against Wisconsin in Jenison Fieldhouse Jan. 22 of this year. "Everything just clicked that day. I thought I did the best I could have done," he said.

Like the four-minute mile, Rudolph added, "A lot of people can do it but it's still nice to have a good day."

He is constantly thinking about gymnastics and the thought came to his mind of a few not-so-good days he has had to live through. One interesting phenomenon of gymnasts is how composed they can be as they pick themselves up after dumping a routine, often in front of hundreds of people.

"I always have an urge to stay on the apparatus, but I fell off once," Rudolph said. "You've got to scrape yourself off the floor and acknowledge the judges despite any pain."

The lessons he has learned in the gym have stayed with Rudolph and are a part of the person.

With graduation a year away, Rudolph's future is not clear and that bothers him. "Right now, it's scary not knowing what I'm going to be doing," Rudolph said. "Gymnastics has been such a big part for six years — how can I just walk away?"

He enjoys coaching, would like to teach for awhile and is sure about one thing. He doesn't want to completely lose touch with the sport.

Spare time is at a premium for Rudolph and when he does get a few moments to himself, he enjoys crafts, such as wood-working, and reading fiction. He is, by his own admission, an introvert.

"I don't think I'm too outgoing. I'm not the kind of person to walk into a room with 50 strangers and come out knowing all of them," Rudolph said.

The Ohio State Buckeyes and the Eastern Michigan Hurons know who he is. Rudolph led the Spartans to a victory over both schools Saturday afternoon at Jenison Fieldhouse.

On his way, he tallied four firsts, six seconds and two thirds. Rudolph also won all-around honors in the triple-dual meet, rolling up 50.90 points, going over the 50-point mark for the fourth time this season.

Szyplu said that Rudolph is in the groove now where he will hit 50 each time out the remainder of the season.

The two victories put the Spartans back on the right track after a loss to Michigan and upped MSU's record for the season to 5-1.

In addition to Rudolph, Dan Miller and Charlie Jenkins spearheaded the Spartans' effort against Ohio State and Eastern. Miller continues to gradually recover from an early-season injury and Jenkins paced the Spartans on the parallel bars.

Jeff Rudolph has managed to stay sharp amid the many Spartan injuries this season and is instrumental in MSU's 5-1 record heading into the second half.

the conference. The Big Ten meet requires compulsories as well as optionals and Rudolph has some difficulty applying himself when it comes to rehearsing his compulsories.

"I'm having some trouble finding time and disciplining myself to practice compulsories. It's like reading a boring book," Rudolph said.

KC REQUESTS PROBE Lanier fight not finished

TRACY RINGOLSBY
UPI Sports Writer

ANAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Kansas City Kings General Manager Joe Axelson Monday

said he requested an NBA investigation into a fight which broke out during Sunday's game between the Kings and Detroit Pistons.

The fight erupted when Pistons' center Bob Lanier punched Kings' backup center Jim Eakins and floored him. Axelson said NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien promised to look into the matter.

Pistons play basketball. With all the talent they have they don't need to play like they do. They should be uncatchable in the league race but instead they are struggling."

Lindsay outkicked Western Michigan University's Tom to take the individual mile at the Western Michigan Relays at Kalamazoo.

My feelings have nothing to do with whether we won or lost the game," said Axelson, referring to Detroit's 130-111 victory. "I don't like the fact that Detroit has been involved in three consecutive games.

Kings center Sam Lacey said there was a difference between being aggressive and trying to hurt people and the Pistons were guilty of trying to injure opponents.

was just a second slower than Ken Popejoy's university record of 4:00.9.

"The guys Detroit has on its team, that's what they like, fighting," said Lacey, who was replaced by Eakins because he was in foul trouble. "Yesterday (Sunday's game) was a case of officials letting the game get out of hand. Detroit came out beating and chopping and if officials make the calls early in the game the players have to back off and don't play as physical."

Johnston said he felt the fight was the turning point in the game. The Pistons had begun to lose their momentum and the Kings were catching them when the fight broke out and Lanier was banished.

MSU's ski club wins slope title

THOMPSONVILLE (UPI) — MSU topped teams from 20 colleges last weekend to capture both the men's and women's divisions in the Midwest Intercollegiate Ski Races at Crystal Mountain.

The Spartan men's team compiled 118 points in the competition for the George Petritz Cup for first place, followed by Michigan at 106 and Notre Dame at 89.

MSU's women skiers rolled up 87 points with Michigan second at 52 and Central Michigan third at 31.

Jeff Diehl of Michigan finished first in men's individual competition with 76.736 points. Remi Vaylot of Notre Dame was second at 76.873 while John Hach of MSU came in third at 77.611.

SWIMMERS PREPARE FOR BIG TEN Women take first in invitational

By CATHY CHOWN
State News Staff Writer

The big date for the Big Ten Invitational is drawing near for the women's swimming team. That meeting has loomed in front of coach Jennifer Parks and the squad all season now — or at least since U-M beat the Spartans a few weeks ago.

But the team is swimming hard in preparation for the competition, and last weekend, MSU won the Terri Tarbell Invitational at Bloomington, Ind.

The Spartans racked up 384 points to win the event, while Indiana University followed with 287. Purdue was third in the field of eight, with 212 points, while Illinois State was fourth.

The Spartans set some pool and team records in the meet, in addition to swimming several personal best times.

Freshman Karen Heath established a pool and team record in the 1,000-yard freestyle event, with a time of 10:51.06. Teammate Becky Hastings was third with a time of 11:05.

Parks expressed concern that Indiana, which the Spartans will face in the Big Ten, had a swimmer who finished a close second to Heath, and also had a diver win the one-meter diving event and another who won the three-meter event.

However, Parks said she was glad that the squad could face some Big Ten teams during the competition.

Heath also set a pool and team record in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:13.65. Heath also anchored the winning 200-yard freestyle team of Karen Waite, Vickie LeFevre and Vickie Reibling with a 1:42.15 time.

Callboxes provided for in bill

By DEBBIE WOLFE
State News Staff Writer
Michigan motorists who worry about the day, or night, their car might break down on a lonely and long piece of highway may soon be able to ease their minds and get rid of their hiking boots.

Currently pending in the state legislature is a bill which would provide for highway call boxes along major roads and expressways.

"The callbox system has worked in California and Florida," said Rep. Lucille H. McCollough, D-Deerborn. "The bill will aid all motorists, but the ability to summon help immediately will be especially important for women, senior citizens and handicappers."

House Bill 4020 was first introduced in the legislature by McCollough in 1975 and was kept in committee for two years. At the end of the last session the bill automatically died and was reintroduced Jan. 13. The measure was referred to the House Standing Committee on Roads and Bridges.

"My car has broken down on highways before and I wished there was some kind of callbox nearby," said Rep. Francis R. Spaniola, D-Corunna, vice chairperson of the committee. "The system would be a great addition to the state of Michigan for the safety of motorists."

The committee has not been formally organized yet to establish the official status of the bill but there has been no great opposition to the proposal, he said.

However, on a smaller scale, a callbox system is scheduled to be installed in the city of Detroit sometime next year, said Bill Savage, highway specialist with the Michigan State Highway Department.

"The callbox system will be installed every one-third mile along a 14-mile stretch of I-94 right through the city of Detroit," he said. "If, after evaluation, the system proves to be functional, the callboxes will be added to all other Detroit freeways."

The total cost of the project will be $450,000 with the federal government picking up 90 per cent of the tab. Of the remaining 10 per cent, the city of Detroit is expected to pay only 12.5 per cent with the state of Michigan responsible for the rest. Currently, there are 47 callbox systems in the country operating on more than 1,904 miles of highways in 19 states. An additional 17 systems are being planned while eight projects have been abandoned because of various installation problems or the expiration of experimental periods.

In 1968, Michigan's I-94 was used as a test highway by the U.S. Department of Transportation's Federal Highway Administration (FHWA). A total of 62 units were installed along a 30-mile stretch of the interstate highway between Jackson and Battle Creek. It remained operative for two years. The system was eventually removed because of its experimental nature and also as a result of poor maintenance.

However, improvements have been made since the late '60s and currently there are two basic types of callboxes used in the country.

One system utilizes a series of push buttons which represent different types of motorist assistance such as police, service and ambulance. Some models also have a cancel button. This type of callbox, which operates on a radio frequency, is being used along I-75 in Florida from the Georgia border to Lake City.

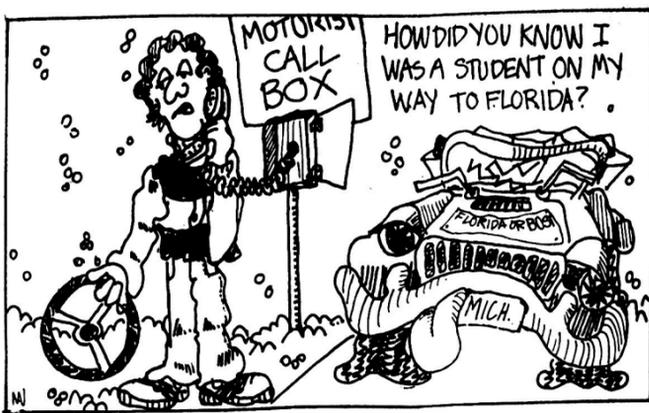

The boxes have been installed at one-half mile alternating intervals so a motorist in trouble would only have to walk a maximum of one quarter mile.

During 1975, 3,000 motorists used the callbox service which stretches over 43 miles of interstate highway.

A second type of callbox utilizes a cable, instead of airwaves, to send a distress message to a central dispatcher. An example of this system is found in California on the San Francisco Bay Toll Bridge. Installed in the 1930s, the system helps stranded motorists on the bridge free of charge.

In most states, services dispatched to a disabled vehicle, by the motorist's request, costs the state an average $12.28 per call. This figure can also be compared to the cost of a police patrol, which averages $21 per call, to illustrate the economic advantage of the callbox system.

In either case, an additional fee is charged to the motorist for private highway services provided, with the exception of San Francisco.

Though the cost factor would appear to favor callboxes over police patrols, the systems are still basically in the experimental stage and have not gained widespread support.

However, the largest motorist aid system in existence is in Los Angeles, Calif., and has been successful in providing a wide variety of services to 2,748 separate callbox units on 349 miles of highway.

For example, a stranded motorist can walk approximately one-eighth of a mile to a callbox and place a service request to a dispatch center operated by the California highway patrol. The dispatcher can then do one of several things:

- He may connect the motorist through to a local phone number.

- A local automobile club may be contacted for assistance or
- The appropriate emergency services in the area of the disabled vehicle may be contacted to give aid.

Variations of these two basic models utilize both the push-button signal method and the direct voice contact system in one unit. This more modern type of callbox can operate on either a radio frequency or a cable to a central dispatcher who organizes the assistance.

State's CF foundation promotes 'kiss' week

The Cystic Fibrosis (CF) Foundation of Michigan is asking parents to pay special attention to kissing their babies during "Kiss Your Baby Week," which began Sunday.

The purpose of this week-long educational attempt is to alert parents to symptoms of cystic fibrosis in their children. One of these symptoms is an extremely salty taste to the child's perspiration, according to John Murphy, associate director of the CF Foundation.

"The perspiration is salty to the point of being almost caked on the child's forehead," Murphy said.

Other symptoms include recurrent wheezing, persistent coughing, excessive mucous, enlargement of fingertips, excessive appetite (but poor weight gain) and the occurrence of pneumonia more than once during childhood, he said.

Cystic fibrosis is an inherited disease which causes breathing difficulties and interferes with the digestive tract, said Thomas Basil, president of the Michigan CF Chapter. Though both parents must be carriers of the CF gene, one in 20 persons in the country is such a carrier. At present, there is no determining test to show who is a carrier.

"Because early diagnosis of cystic fibrosis is essential to longer life for these children, we have embarked on a statewide campaign to bring this vital health message to the people of Michigan," Basil said.

Through the Looking Glass is not to be confused with Alice in Wonderland. It is a first run engagement. Through the Looking Glass is a beautiful super erotic film — and that's not just our opinion.

Opponent of Seafarer blasts Milliken inaction

By NANCY JARVIS
State News Staff Writer

As part of the observances for Seafarer Concern Week, the self-appointed, self-elected governor of the state of Superior will speak tonight at 7 in 336 Union about why Gov. William G. Milliken should veto Project Seafarer now.

Theodore G. Albert, governor of the proposed state of Superior, said Monday Upper Peninsula citizens have amply displayed their disapproval of the Navy's project, yet Milliken has not exercised the veto power he said he would use if sufficient protest arose.

"Seafarer highlights the ever-growing problem of when the government speaks everyone must be subservient," Albert said.

He said public referendums in the Upper Peninsula have rejected the project by 3 to 1 and 10 to 1 and yet Milliken has not vetoed the plan.

"The Navy's recent public relations trip to Michigan proves that Milliken's right to veto has been revoked," Albert said.

Seafarer is an underground antenna system the Navy is proposing to install in the Upper Peninsula. It would emit low frequency sound waves to submerged submarines.

Albert said the project really is not new, since former projects by the name of Shelf and Sanguine have been proposed and rejected in the past. He said that when the Sanguine project was considered, studies revealed that rats died after being near the low frequency waves.

"Seafarer is basically the same as Sanguine," he said.

Albert has long been an opponent of Project Seafarer. In July 1975, he alerted every county commissioner in the Upper Peninsula of the dangers of the project.

He has also been fighting for autonomy in the Upper Peninsula and says he will not give up the fight.

"There is going to be a state of Superior and I am going to be the governor," he said.

Before Albert's speech, the movie "Nuclear Reaction in Wylh" will be shown.

Bruce Brown, Human Rights party promoter, said this reflects how citizens' demonstrations can block projects they do not want to take place.

The movie depicts how residents of a small town in Germany successfully blocked the construction of a nuclear power plant.

"The same thing could happen here," Brown said. Both events are sponsored by the Human Rights party.

Republican post sought by two

By JANET OLSEN
State News Staff Writer

Though the candidates seeking state chair seats of political parties often include a very strong candidate and an "also ran," Bill Sederberg, Ingham County Republican chairperson, said Monday that "two very strong candidates" are seeking the Republican state chair.

Sederberg made this point at an Open Forum for the Ingham County Republicans at Alex's Point After. The forum, which Sederberg hopes might become a monthly event, featured William McLaughlin and Robert Edwards, the two party members seeking the seat at the party's state convention Feb. 18 and 19.

Both candidates said a stronger base is needed within the party. McLaughlin, who is the current state chairperson, said he is proud of what the party has done in the past year, but "obviously we didn't do enough."

"In this state and 49 others around the nation, we're a long way from being the majority," he said. "Mere rhetoric alone is not going to do it. We have got to let the people know we're alive and breathing."

Edwards, who has served three terms in the Michigan Legislature as a representative of Flint, said the party cannot broaden its base by simply adopting Democratic programs, since it has won before with Republican programs.

"We have to get rid of the calloused image and Watergate," he added. "We have to finally admit that Watergate hurt us — no, not hurt us, but crippled us."

In order to attract new people to the party, Edwards said he would "put them on notice that we are coming out for their votes." One of his targets, a group he has dealt extensively with in the past, would be union workers.

"We have to have someone who will put a wedge between the union workers and union leaders," he said, adding that the workers are ready to accept Republican ideas.

Both candidates talked about Gov. William G. Milliken's role in the Michigan Republican party. McLaughlin said the belief that the party is "Milliken heavy" disturbs him.

"We're lucky we've got a Bill Milliken in this party," he said. "And I hope he never ceases having an interest in the party."

Even though Edwards said he was in total support of Milliken, he said that the Republican party "is really an extension of the governor's office."

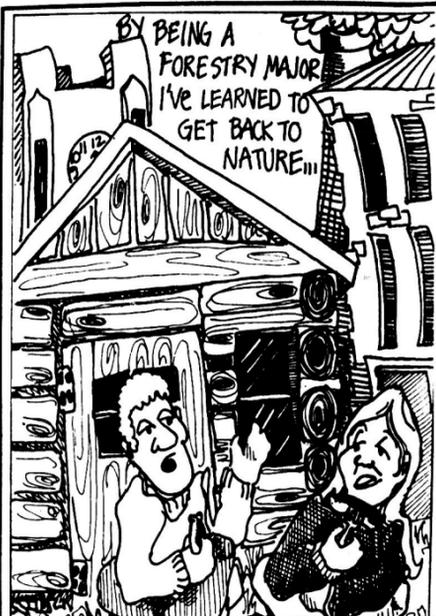

"I am afraid that if Milliken left Michigan to seek other goals, he would leave us with a devastated party," he said.

McLaughlin said that John Connally best summed up one of the problems facing the Republican party.

"You can organize until you're blue in the face," he said. "You can organize and organize and organize, and when you are through, you're going to have the best organized 20 per cent of the people there is."

The Republican state convention rules committee has not yet decided whether the election of state chairperson at the state convention in Detroit will be by open or secret ballot. Edwards said he favors the secret ballot since it removes pressures and is done in the same manner as "the American people vote." McLaughlin, however, said he will never be in favor of a secret ballot.

"It's a little confusing to say that we must open up the party and yet close the ballot," he said.

PLACE FOR MEETINGS, PARTIES Club planning log cabin

By JONI CIPRIANO
State News Staff Writer

If the Forestry Club has its way, a portion of MSU will return to an earlier era.

"It's been a pet idea of a couple of guys in the club to build a log cabin somewhere on campus to replace the one that used to stand behind Wells Hall," said Kevin McGreevy, Forestry Club chairperson of funding and publicity.

Now, the eight-member Forestry Cabin Committee is working to make this "pet idea" a reality. With the support of a number of campus conservation groups, a proposal for the log cabin construction has been submitted to Jack Breslin, MSU vice president.

"If we get this approved, everyone on campus could use it for meetings or parties," McGreevy said. "We'd also like to set up some sort of conservation display inside it."

The former log cabin was torn down to make room for other buildings, according to Randall B. Heiligmann, assistant professor of forestry.

The old log cabin was torn down at least 15 years ago, but it used to serve as the center of activity for the Forestry Club," Heiligmann said. "The idea of building another log cabin has tremendous romantic appeal."

The new log cabin would probably be located between Mt.

Hope Road and the railroad tracks south of Baker Woodlot, McGreevy said. The Forestry Department has given the club permission to use trees from the MSU-owned Dunbar Forest in the Upper Peninsula, if the proposal is approved.

"It would cost about $15,000 to construct this," McGreevy said. "The Forestry Alumni Club will donate some funds, if it gets approved. We also plan on soliciting local civic groups and hope to get discounts from local industries."

The cabin would measure 40 feet by 45 feet and would be built in the traditional way, using notched logs, he said. It would be built in stages as money permits.

"Hopefully, if we get approval, we can start construction next fall," McGreevy said.

Breslin did not indicate whether approval would be forthcoming.

"This proposal was just given to me a week ago and it's premature to talk about it right now," he said.

However, McGreevy said he is optimistic about the proposal's fate.

"We've got people from the Natural Resources and Environmental Education Club, Park and Recreation Club, Fisheries and Wildlife Club and others backing us and writing letters of support for this idea," he said.
