Suspect arraigned in NY murder case

By RICHARD M. NEYER
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Jimmy Carter said Thursday he's "very pleased" with the new agreement reached in Panama Canal by the United States and Panama. The agreement, reached over the weekend, will extend the lease of the Panama Canal to the United States by 50 years.

The new agreement was reached in Washington, D.C., after three days of negotiations between the United States and Panama. The United States agreed to pay $50 million in exchange for the extension of the lease.

The new agreement was signed by President Carter and President Omar Torrijos of Panama. It was the result of two days of negotiations between the two presidents.

The provision is President Jimmy Carter has passed energy package that would require coal-fired plants to limit sulfur emissions. The team is focused on finding new ways to help coal-fired power plants reduce emissions. It is expected to be under consideration by the Senate soon.

Concerning energy...

President Carter has displayed remarkable political sagacity in his efforts to move a meaningful energy bill through Congress. In a generally nationwide televised speech on April 30, the president declared the "moment of national awakening" that the energy crisis is a participatory issue that will not wait for public or political action.

There are two sides to the energy issue. I am a resident of Ithaca, New York, where there are a number of small towns and villages, and I am sure that this is true of other towns and villages in this area as well. I believe that it is a matter of public policy, and I am sure that it is a matter of public policy, that the energy bill should be passed.

In the past, the United States has been a nation of energy producers. However, as the oil crisis has worsened, the United States has become more dependent on foreign oil. The energy bill is a way to help the United States become more energy independent.

Welfare proposals have merit

President Carter's proposals for overhauling the welfare system have a public rationale, and they are well worth considering. That is why the president expressed his support for a "modest" welfare system, and why he said, "We have a responsibility to the poor, to the unemployed, to the disabled."

Carter's proposals, which are intended to help those in need but not to create a welfare system that is too generous, are well considered. He has proposed a "targeted" welfare system, which would provide assistance to those who are truly in need, and a "voluntary" system, which would allow people to help themselves.

There are some people who say that the welfare system is too generous, and that it is a waste of money. However, the welfare system is necessary to help those who are truly in need. It is a matter of public policy that the welfare system should be improved, and that it should be better able to help those who are truly in need.

The welfare system is a matter of public policy, and it is necessary for the United States to have a welfare system that is well considered and well designed. Carter's proposals for overhauling the welfare system are well worth considering, and they are well worth supporting.
HELPING YOUNG STAFF

May counsels pitchers

DETROIT (UPI) — The young pitcher's mind is a treasure chest—of bright ideas, colorful visions, but often a bit jumbled, too.

Detroit's starting rotation is a wild card today. Four starters will be a collection of solid young men, but not necessarily good ones.

Tommy Sheppard, 27, and Jack Morris, 26, are two young pitchers that were the regulars last year. They aren't sure what to expect from today's game, but they're ready to take the field.

Tommy has been working on his curveball, trying to make it more effective. He's been experimenting with different grips and speeds, trying to find the perfect combination.

Jack, on the other hand, has been working on his fastball. He's been practicing his mechanics and trying to improve his release point. He's hoping to generate more velocity and sink on his pitches.

Both pitchers are very much looking forward to today's game. They're eager to show what they've been working on and to prove that they can hold their own in the majors.

They're also hoping to get some valuable experience playing against experienced hitters. It will be a good test for their stuff and a chance to learn from the best.

Jim Leyland, the Tigers' manager, is excited about having these two young pitchers in the rotation.

"Tommy and Jack are both very talented and have a lot of potential," Leyland said. "They just need to work on their mechanics and stay focused on the task at hand."

Leyland believes that the young pitchers will fit in well with the experienced starters and provide a dynamic mix in the rotation.

"We have a lot of young talent in our starting rotation," Leyland said. "Tommy and Jack are just two examples. I'm confident that they can help us win games and contribute to our overall success this season."

Players Gallery production staged, in honor of the neutron bombed

By JOHN WALL
State News Reviewer

Don't move a muscle, it's the bomb. You can't do a thing. You can't hear anything. You can't think. You can't even breathe. That's how it feels in Players Gallery, a production that has been described as a "bombastic, bombastic" work of art. The production is being staged in honor of the neutron bombed, a significant event in history.
