NINE OTHERS ALSO CHARGED

Gandhi arrested for abuse

Former Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi is surrounded by supporters as police officers put her under arrest at her New Delhi home, charging her with abuse of her position as prime minister.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Seven months after her iron grip on India was broken in a stunning election defeat, Indira Gandhi was arrested Monday and charged with abusing her position as prime minister. She promptly charged the arrest was political.

Authorities said nine other persons, including four former cabinet ministers and Gandhi's personal secretary, were also arrested. Gandhi was charged in two cases under India's Prevention of Corruption Act, officials reported.

They said she was accused in one case of "illegally conniving" with others and pressuring two companies to obtain 104 jeeps for election work in several election districts including her own. The second charge alleged Gandhi misused her position by awarding a $13.4 million government oil drilling contract to a French firm, despite a lower bid by a competitor.

The names of the companies were not immediately released, and details of the other charges were not made public.

Her 11-year administration was capped by 21-months of emergency rule in which an estimated 100,000 political opponents were jailed. Among them were many leaders of the Janata party government that succeeded Gandhi's regime after parliamentary elections last March. Gandhi's former petroleum minister, K.D. Malaviya, and Malaviya's secretary were arrested and charged in connection with the oil drilling case, officials said. Former Chemicals Minister P.C. Sethi and his secretary were arrested in the jeep case along with Gandhi's secretary.

Two other former Gandhi government ministers, H. R. Gokhale and D. P. Chattopadhyaya, were accused of conspiracy and abuse of power along with Malaviya and Sethi in a case in which businesses allegedly were pressured to pay high prices for low-value "souvenirs" turned out by Gandhi's Congress party.

Two businessmen were also named in this case. R. P. Goenka, of Duncan Brothers Private, Ltd. and M. V. Arunchalam, a former president of the Indian Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

S. M. Agarwal, a former secretary in the Ministry of Communications, was charged in another case alleging manipulation in the awarding of a telephone equipment contract to an unnamed Japanese firm.

The arrest came as Gandhi appeared to be setting the stage for a comeback with a series of political appearances in rural areas and several statements critical of Prime Minister Morarji Desai's government. Desai was among those detained by Mrs. Gandhi under emergency rules that suspended civil liberties and censored the Indian press for the first time since the nation gained independence in 1947.

Gandhi was snared in a web of political corruption charges being woven by government investigators probing the inner circle of her government. Her son Sanjay, 30, has been implicated in a half dozen legal cases and two of her former cabinet ministers have been arrested on charges of official corruption.

Scores of agents from India's Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) accompanied by policewomen, arrested Gandhi, 59, at her New Delhi home while more than 1,000 of her followers crowded around the house chanting support for her.

Gandhi was held in her home for more than an hour after the plain-clothesmen arrived. She was then driven to a police jail in a CBI car.

While investigators were inside the home, Gandhi issued a statement charging that the "arrest is a political one. It is to prevent me from going before the people. It is an attempt to discredit me in their eyes and the eyes of the world."

The agents refused Gandhi's demand that she be taken away in handcuffs. Sources close to the household said the investigators explained this was not customary in such cases.

In her statement, the former prime minister said even though she lost her individual liberty for a time her supporters must be prepared to fight "the very real threat to the country's self-reliance."

Outside the Gandhi home, her supporters chanted "Long Live Indira Gandhi," and protested against "the dictatorship of Charan Singh," the Indian home minister, who is the nation's top law enforcement officer.

During the corruption controversy, Singh has repeated counteracted calls for Gandhi's arrest by saying that the new government, unlike the old, would operate strictly according to the law and that "the wheels of justice grind slowly but surely."

Government sources said earlier investigations of officials of the Gandhi government touched on Gandhi herself. But as one highly placed source put it, "The case against Gandhi has got to be ironclad. There can be no mistakes."

Gandhi, Sanjay, and officials of her Congress party have charged that the investigations are part of a "political vendetta" by the Desai government.

In investigations so far, Sanjay has been accused of embezzling the equivalent of $7 million from political funds of the Congress party, conspiring to destroy a film satirizing power-crazed politicians, and using improper influence to sell defective water treatment chemicals to the federally controlled Delhi municipal corporation.

In at least three of the cases he has been granted "anticipatory bail," a provision of Indian law enabling persons under investigation to apply for bail before arrest.

Gandhi, daughter of India's first prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, was named prime minister in 1966.

During her sometimes turbulent rule, India defeated Pakistan on the battlefield and aided in the birth of the independent nation of Bangladesh, carved out of East Pakistan on India's western border.

The Gandhi government also abolished the constitutionally guaranteed privileges of the British-trained Civil Service and withdrew government stipends paid to India's former royal rulers.

The political problems that led to her election defeat last March began in 1975 when an Indian court ruled in favor of an opposition coalition that had brought charges of irregularities in a crucial state election. The ruling had the effect of disqualifying Gandhi's membership in parliament.

In a recent speech, Gandhi charged Desai and the new government were making her and her Congress party scapegoats for their own troubles in easing India's problems.

Senate calls off energy filibuster

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Militant Senate opponents of deregulating natural gas ended a 13-day-long filibuster Monday, saying lack of support from the White House made it impossible to continue their delaying tactics.

Sens. James Abourezk, D-S.D., and Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said they would allow the Senate to vote on the natural gas pricing legislation.

"In view of the White House position, we will call off the filibuster effective immediately," Metzenbaum told reporters.

A vote on the bill could come today.

Their surrender came after Vice President Walter F. Mondale joined in a dramatic effort by Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd designed to break the filibuster.

Mondale, presiding over the Senate, began ruling amendments filed by the filibusterers out of order at Byrd's request, ignoring the shouts of Abourezk and other senators seeking recognition.

The two liberal Democrats had been waging the filibuster by demanding roll call votes on hundreds of amendments they had filed to the bill.

Even though the administration wants to keep price controls on natural gas, it joined Senate leaders in trying to break the filibuster on grounds the impasse was jeopardizing the rest of President Carter's energy program.

Meanwhile, in a last-ditch effort to salvage part of Carter's natural gas pricing proposals, Senate Energy Committee Chairman Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., unveiled a new "compromise."

Aimed at picking up enough votes of deregulation proponents to avoid an expected Senate vote for full natural gas decontrol, Jackson's measure should lift the controls after 1986, while permitting gas prices to rise gradually between now and then.

Jackson said the Carter Administration does not oppose the compromise effort even though the White House is now looking toward a House-Senate conference committee to restore the president's original plan, which already has passed the House.

The administration's decision to send Mondale to the Senate to try to break the impasse disheartened the filibusterers, who previously had boasted of White House support for their tactics.

"Without support of the administration, it doesn't seem to make sense," Metzenbaum said.

And Abourezk agreed, saying, "It would have been a matter of a relatively short time before it would have ended, anyway."

Earlier, Abourezk had accused Carter of betraying those who favored the administration plan. "We have had the rug pulled out from under us by the president of the United States," he said.

"I never thought Jimmy Carter would lie," Abourezk said.

At Byrd's request, Mondale ruled out of order more than 30 of the filibusterers' more than 200 remaining amendments, one by one, until cries of outrage from senators of both parties stopped the process.

Legislation to limit expenses

LANSING (UPI) — Rep. Dan Angel said today he will introduce legislation to limit expenses of members of the governing boards of state-supported colleges and universities to $1,200 a year.

The Battle Creek Republican pointed to MSU Trustee Michael Smydra as an example of the kind of spending he believes should be brought under control.

"I don't mean to pick on him individually," Angel said, "but Smydra did bring the question into focus and I think the public good demands that we put a cap on this kind of abuse."

Smydra, serving his first term as an MSU trustee, reportedly was reimbursed $4,668 in the first four months of this year, nearly eight times as much as any other board member.

"I have no idea whether or not the Smydra incident reflects a general problem, but I do believe it behooves us to collect information and evaluate exactly what our trustees are spending," Angel said.

"Smydra obviously does not subscribe to a philosophy of thrift, or even moderation," he said. "I believe that spending $709 of the state's money to buy a telephone answering machine, and $552 on 'university entertainment,' whatever that might be, is excessive and self-indulgent at best, and certainly makes a mockery of the concept of public accountability."

MSU delays E.L. sewer, misses federal deadline

By KIM SHANAHAN

State News Staff Writer
MSU's Department of Parks and Planning blew any chance for East Lansing to meet a federal deadline to request funds for a much needed "Super Sewer," according to East Lansing City Engineer Bruce.

City Parks and Planning Director Milton said MSU was not aware of any such deadline for the city.

East Lansing needed the funds to begin work on a waste-water treatment facility that was ordered to build by the Michigan Resource Commission.

The original plan called for the treatment plant to be built on MSU property — a move that needed University approval.

After suggesting East Lansing use an alternate site — which caused unnecessary delay — MSU discovered it has misinterpreted the plan and gave approval for the final site about seven months later.

The city's drawings and explanations are a little vague," Baron said, explaining his misinterpretation of the plan.

The city had until Oct. 1 to submit finished blueprints and a projected cost analysis to the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) for a system which would eliminate sewage spillovers into the Red Cedar River during heavy rains.

The DNR's enforcement branch must now conduct an investigation to determine how it was at fault for the missed deadline. If the DNR determines the delay was uncalled for, it has the power to assess civil fines against East Lansing until the problem is corrected.

Had East Lansing met the DNR deadline it would have been eligible to receive the approximately $20 million necessary from the $400 million Congress appropriated to Michigan for 1977.

East Lansing was relatively assured of getting all the requested funds since the city's priority ranking, set by the DNR and determined by the level of pollution to the population, is twelfth out of 548.

The city is currently under a standard three-step federal funding grant with a set schedule and deadlines for each step. The first step of the grant allots money for a preliminary study of the problem and determines a possible solution.

After DNR approval of step one the city is authorized to draw the blueprints and work out a cost analysis. Because East Lansing missed the deadline for step two, actual construction of the project — the third step — could not proceed.

The DNR gave the city funds for step one last year which East Lansing used to subcontract Hubble, Roth and Clark, of Birmingham, to come up with a solution.

The subcontractors' plan called for an 11-foot-wide concrete pipe to run westward under East Lansing, 8,700 feet to an underground retention tank located on MSU property.

Easement rights and a construction permit were required from the University before the city could proceed with the second step. So it submitted the plan to parks and planning for approval in January 1977.

Baron misinterpreted the city's plan he said, thinking East Lansing was proposing an above-ground tank which would interfere with existing fisheries and wildlife projects, and refused the city easement rights.

The parks and planning director then suggested the city get easement rights from Lansing to use the Red Cedar Golf Course, adjacent to Brody Complex, for the retention-tank site. The city asked for and received easement rights from Lansing and began work in that direction.

Meanwhile, MSU realized East Lansing had meant a below-ground tank which would not be harmful to the flora and fauna Baron said.

The MSU Board of Trustees granted easement rights and a construction permit to East Lansing on Sept. 23, leaving the city just eight days to prepare plan blueprints and an accurate cost analysis for the Oct. 1 deadline.

Had MSU approved the plan in January rather than September, East Lansing would have met the DNR deadline with time to spare Bruce said.

Seventy-five percent of the proposed waste-water treatment facility will be funded by the federal government and five percent will be covered by the state. The remaining 20 percent — $4 million — will be collected from East Lansing residents.

East Lansing must now wait for the 1978 Congress to appropriate funds to Michigan for water purification projects and again attempt to gain federal funds for the facility.

Supreme Court upholds ruling; gays may be fired from jobs

By RICHARD CARELLI

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, in a busy first day of its fall term, let stand on Monday the ruling of a state court in Washington that homosexuals are immoral and may be fired from their jobs.

The court refused to hear the appeal of James Gaylor, fired in 1972 when his homosexuality was discovered by officials at the Tacoma high school where he had taught for 13 years.

Gaylor contended that his constitutional rights were violated when his status as a homosexual was used to dismiss him. The Washington Supreme Court ruled that homosexuality is immoral and Gaylor could be fired even though he was accused of no homosexual act.

Civil liberties attorneys, who had hoped to use the case to have the Supreme Court review the rights of homosexuals, predictably were outraged by the court's action.

"The case presented the Supreme Court with an opportunity to say that discrimination against people by government because of their status as homosexuals is impermissible," the American Civil Liberties Union said.

"This Supreme Court maintains its record of gross insensitivity to individual rights," the organization said in a statement from its New York headquarters.

Justices Thurgood Marshall and William J. Brennan Jr., the court's only two consistently liberal members, voted to hear Gaylor's appeal.

They also were the only two justices to vote in favor of hearing the appeal of a Paramus, N.J., schoolteacher, John Gish, who was disciplined and ordered to take a psychiatric examination after assuming the presidency of the New Jersey Gay Activist Alliance.

The votes of four justices are needed to grant review.

Gaylor's attorneys had argued that he was denied his constitutional rights to privacy, liberty, freedom of expression and equal protection under the law.

Federal laws and past court interpretations of the constitution make illegal most forms of discrimination based on race, religion, sex, age, color and nationality. But sexual preference has been given no special protection.

Many states and communities have passed such anti-discrimination laws. The repeal of one such law, in Dade County, Fla., propelled the issue of homosexual rights into national prominence.

In the 40 pages of orders handed down Monday, the justices also:

- Agreed to decide the legality of pension plans requiring women to contribute a greater portion of their salaries than men based on studies showing that women on the average live longer to collect benefits. At the same time, the justices let stand a state court's decision outlawing pension plans which pay smaller monthly retirement benefits to women based on the same life-expectancy tables.
- Let stand a lower court's order requiring the busing of students throughout 11 school

Lansing's parks chairman looks ahead

Development of waterfront in future

By JIM DUFRESNE
State News Staff Writer

Blair stood on the bank of the Grand River and looked at the city. Officially the Lansing council was in Detrich Park on N. Grand River in Lansing. But Blair was standing on a vacant lot with nothing but a picnic table and a trash can and large mounds of dirt. "You just wait and see. Next year this is going to be beautiful," said Blair, the parks chairman of the city. "You just wait and see. Next year this is going to be beautiful."

MSU students may lose funds given by state

By DON SPICKLEN
State News Staff Writer

Some 1000 Michigan students may get emergency tuition aid as a result of legislation now being pushed through the state, there is a good possibility that MSU will receive none or little of the $1.3 million proposed allocation. Marvin Rist, MSU incoming student financial aid director, said he is not sure because students who were accepted by MSU may not have sufficient funds to even enroll. The University has already covered all students who qualify with packages of state, federal and gift funding, mixed with study programs and student loans. In addition, the money would affect smaller institutions more, financial aid officials since they lack large scholarships and study programs such as those at MSU. The bill was unanimously passed by the Committee on Colleges Universities on Sept. 21 and now awaits action by the House Appropriations Committee. Rist calls for funding to aid students who might not otherwise be able to attend school.

John Jursa, director of the Michigan Department of Educational Assistance, said that final plans for the distribution of the money have not been drawn up. He added that the money would be used strictly for students attending Michigan public and private schools and that the state probably request a list of students who qualify by state and federal definitions as in need of aid.

St. Henry Dykema, director of financial aid and Charles Seeley, director of incoming student financial aid, all agreed that MSU should put such funding to use. They added that such funding, however, would be regulated by the state and federal governments to how much an individual could receive. Dykema said that the money could be used to switch some students from loan-type aid which incur student debts to direct grants.

"We try to prevent students from graduating and owing us more than $2000 in loans, but it still happens," he said. The bill is sponsored by Rep. Jackie Vaughn III, D-Detroit who is chairman of the Committee on Colleges. While he said the bill is just a "drop in the ocean," he feels it will be a needed drop since it will be the difference to some students of going or not going to school. "I do not consider this adequate but it marks a beginning. What is needed is a revision of our entire structure of scholarships and aid to college students," he said. "Unless something is done, higher education will be priced out of the reach of the masses."

looping through the heart of downtown and ending back at Waverly Rd. in the southwest section.

There will also be a second bike path and walkway starting at the Grand River, running along the Red Cedar River and ending in back of Brody dorms.

The system will connect over 70 percent of Lansing's park, enable Michigan State University students to ride their bikes downtown in less than 15 minutes and utilize the city's rivers to their fullest. As park chairman the last four years, Blair's main goal has been to develop Lansing's vast park and waterfront acreage.

"We have one of the best park systems in the country," Blair said. "But we have to develop what we have. Right now most parks are just raw land."

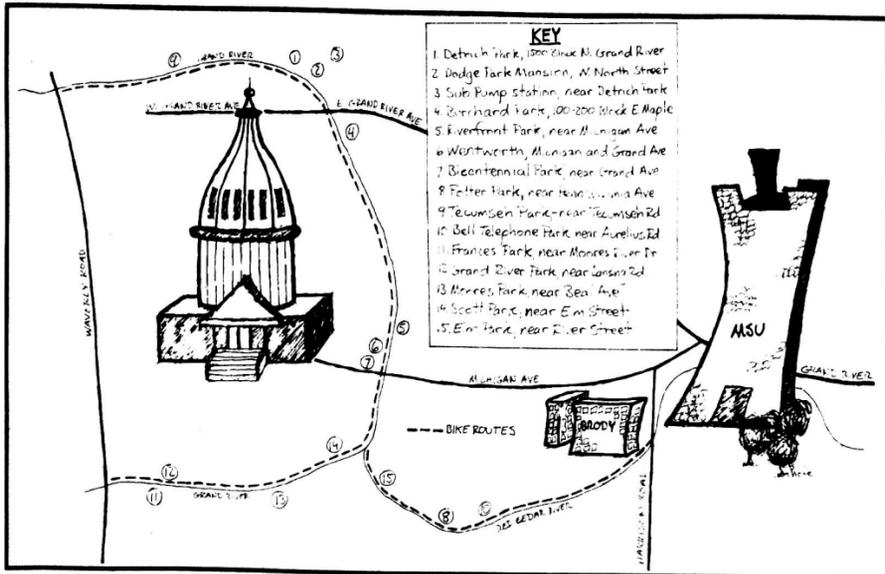

Lansing does, however, have quite an abundance of raw land or designated parks; more parks per acre than any other city in Michigan. And just as important Lansing allocates more of its budget, 11 percent, to parks and recreation than any other city in the state.

"The City of Lansing has the most beautiful system of rivers in it that can be used for canoeing, biking or cross country skiing," said Blair. "But people just don't realize it because our parks don't go anywhere."

"That's the main reason behind the bike path. We're trying to piece our parks together."

There are other reasons for the bike path and walkway, which someday may extend all along the Grand River on both sides of the waterway. In the city's effort to rejuvenate its downtown, the path could be a major stimulus to businesses as it will connect north Lansing and MSU to the heart of the city. Though only small sections of the bike path have been built, there are already plans by two restaurants to build outdoor cafes near the Grand River.

The bike path and park system could also be used for city-sponsored activities as canoe races, marathons or bike races as well as being an easy access to Lansing's main park, Riverfront park, where ethnic festivals and outdoor concerts are held.

The entire riverfront plan is not new or even a few years old. The city began organizing the waterfront system in 1921 and slowly has been acquiring the property along the Grand and Red Cedar Rivers. Today there is only a few pieces left that Lansing doesn't own. "We own all but three pieces of land on the Red Cedar," said Blair. "I believe we are only two years away from connecting MSU to the Lansing bike paths." Much of the funds for developing the parks, buying the land and cleaning up the Grand River is coming from three Economic Development Administration grants totaling more than $3 million.

Among the improvements for the park system are to convert the abandoned Waterworks Sub Station across from Detrich Park into a park and canoe delivery and to restore the historical Dodge Mansion on W. North St.

The bike path will run through both parks along with Burchard Park on E. Maple where the Lansing Dam is located. At Burchard Park the area will be landscaped, a canoe portage will be constructed around the dam and fish ladders built in the water.

With the fish ladders, Blair plans to have the Department of Natural Resources stock the Grand River with steelhead and salmon and turn it into one of the best fishing spots in central Michigan. Night lights, stands and a fish cleaning station will also be built so people will be able to watch the salmon make their way upstream during the mating season.

Other future plans for the park system are to turn the Millstreet Bldg. into the R.E. Olds and Old Car Museum, to build a walkway across the Grand River at the end of Washtenaw St. and to further develop the Bell Telephone Park across from Potter Park on the Red Cedar River as a camping area.

So far almost all the plans have been approved by both the city council and the EDA and the funds appropriated. One problem, however, still remains — the debate over the Poxson Bldg.

The Poxson Bldg. is located on the corner of Michigan Ave. and the Grand River in the heart of Lansing. Originally plans called for the destruction of the building and land turn into one of the parks of the riverfront system.

But after the City Club, a social organization of prominent Lansing businessmen, expressed interest in it, the city council voted to put the sale of Poxson Bldg. on the November ballot. Last week Blair and council member Robert Hull sued and obtained a court order to keep the issue off the ballot until the matter is settled in court.

A hearing will be held Wednesday at 10:00 a.m. before County Circuit Judge James T. Kallman on Blair and Hull's suit against the city council.

John Fielding doesn't deny Milliken's claim

By SCOTT WIERENGA
State News Staff Writer

The producer and narrator of the controversial British film on the polybrominated biphenyl (PBB) affair in Michigan said Gov. William G. Milliken's claim that he did not attempt to suppress American broadcast of the film is "probably true."

Thames Television news correspondent, John Fielding, said in an interview with the State News he does not mean to say that the governor's aids did not try to suppress the broadcast. "It's an interesting relationship between Milliken and his aides," Fielding said. "He has built-in deniability."

Fielding said that while he does not know how much discussion goes on between the governor and his aides, he said he can not believe Milliken would not be informed on actions of that importance.

Fielding said he has no idea why American television networks have not done major documentaries on the PBB disaster. "It'll be interesting to see if American networks come in the next week," Fielding said.

When asked whether he brought his film crew to Michigan with preconceived ideas on the controversy which might prejudice his film presentation, Fielding responded that he previously knew nothing about the PBB disaster. He said he first heard about it last winter while covering a different story. He went to a Chicago Tribune reporter who supplied him with all the background information and history of the PBB affair.

Fielding said he originally was planning to make a 30 minute program for his network. He said that as he delved further into the story it became apparent that the story was much too big to be handled in a 30 minute broadcast. He said the program had to be cut significantly to fit into its final 66 minute length for British television.

Fielding said one part that was cut out of the program is footage of farmer Rick Halbert reflecting on his efforts to get MSU to undertake research on his cattle. "They told Halbert they didn't want to become involved in a squabble between a farmer and the feed companies," Fielding said.

The program shows Halbert, the first Michigan farmer whose cattle were infected by PBB, complain about an MSU study on some of his dead calves after which MSU reported the animals "died of starvation."

Fielding said part of a conversation he had with farmer Tom Butler had to be edited out because Butler stopped in mid-sentence, completely forgetting his train of thought.

Another time, Fielding said Butler ordered a new car and never remembered to pick it up. Fielding related that Butler's wife, who is a school teacher, fell asleep in the classroom. These incidents, Fielding said, were examples of the "classic symptoms" of PBB poisoning.

Fielding, presently in Michigan to film a follow-up report for Thames Television, viewed portions of the taped rebuttal program which will air after the Fielding film. Though he said he was reluctant to comment on the rebuttal film without a transcript of the program, he took issue with several points made in the program.

The typical beginning-of-the-week blues were a little darker and more widespread than usual Monday. Students in a number of dormitories got up late because their alarm clocks did not ring. They took ice-cold showers, ate breakfast by candlelight and had to forego their usual morning cup of coffee. Many parts of campus had no electricity from about 7:30 a.m. until 10:30 a.m. All this was caused by a blown fuse in a control circuit, explained Paul Nilsson, director of the automotive and utility services at the Physical Plant. "It was a minor problem," Nilsson said, "but the boilers went off and it takes a while to get them going again." Some buildings, including Olin Health Center, were not affected by the blackout. "We have a tie-in with Consumers Power Company for 15,000 watts," Nilsson said. "This provides electricity for critical buildings in case of an emergency." However, most classes were held despite the power failure, since the bright sunshine helped make up for the lack of electricity in the dimmed classrooms.

Reviewing Helsinki: U.S. must retain ideals

The issue of human rights is in the news again.

In 1975, 35 countries signed an agreement at Helsinki, Finland, which recognized post-World War II European boundaries. The pact enraged conservatives, who charged, correctly, that it constituted a tacit affirmation of Soviet hegemony over the enslaved nations of Eastern Europe. These critics were mollified to some extent by another provision of the treaty, which mandated greater civil liberties for citizens of Communist countries.

In the two years since the signing of the pact, it is obvious that the Soviet Union has not lived up to its end of the bargain. Indeed, even greater restrictions have been placed on Communist-bloc occupants, a trend which accelerated when the Carter administration adopted an outspoken stance in favor of worldwide human rights.

The review which the signatory nations are undertaking this week has all the earmarks of a charade. In an attempt to achieve better relations with the Soviet Union and break the deadlock SALT talks, the United States has muted its criticisms of Soviet human rights violations. Former U.N. ambassador Arthur Goldberg, who heads the U.S. delegation, has said that "to go and exchange hearts and flowers and platitudes would not serve the accord." At the same time, he affirms that the United States will not seek a confrontation with the Soviets on the human rights issue.

Practically speaking, this strategy might be the most beneficial in terms of fostering more harmonious relations between East and West. However, it must be asked at what price such relations are to be achieved and

Geneva bottleneck

The long march to a Geneva peace conference on the Middle East seems to have taken a shuffle backwards because of a U.S.-Soviet declaration issued this weekend; this, though the sentiments of the proposal appear valid.

The declaration called for Palestinian representation at Geneva, Israeli withdrawal from lands conquered during the 1967 war, and a request that Israel recognize the "legitimate rights" of the Palestinians.

Israel has long ruled out substantial withdrawal from the occupied territories and rejects a Palestinian entity on the West Bank. Instead it has called for peace treaties with the surrounding nations, has offered greater autonomy to the West Bank Arabs while retaining military control, maintained. Carter's early pronouncements of human rights and civil liberties stirred millions of people, and even raised hopes that the United States would again stand for decency and idealism in geopolitical affairs, a stance sorely needed in the aftermath of the Vietnam debacle. If the Helsinki review concludes with a written statement undermining these ideals, the net effect would be to diminish American influence in the world. Whatever the outcome of this latest summit, we hope the United States emerges with its basic principles, so eloquently enunciated by the Carter administration earlier this year, intact.

and is willing to relinquish only small portions of its occupied territories.

Each of these steps will be necessary for a lasting Mideast settlement.

It is becoming increasingly evident that the split between Israel and its Arab neighbors is so deep and profound that a meaningful Geneva conference has little chance of getting off the ground. It can be argued that the U.S.-Soviet proposal was counterproductive, inasmuch as it has ignited calls within Israel for a government of "popular unity" to resist these proposals.

However, the sentiments contained in the proposal are valid. Israel must recognize that if a lasting peace in the Mideast is to be achieved, it will have to give a little ground.

'Koreagate' may involve GOP

WASHINGTON — The House Ethics Committee is pulling out all stops to get the testimony of Korean payoff man Tongsun Park. The committee has even approached ex-Rep. Cornelius Gallagher, D-N.J., himself a prominent figure in the Koreagate investigation and a close friend of Park, to act as a secret intermediary.

Democratic leaders would like to implicate some Republicans in the Koreagate scandal, so it can't be used against the Democrats as a campaign issue. One Democratic source suggested that Gallagher might be able to persuade Park to talk about reports that a Nixon campaign aide put the arm on him for a $100,000 contribution.

Democratic leaders would like to implicate some Republicans in the Koreagate scandal, so it can't be used against the Democrats as a campaign issue. One Democratic source suggested that Gallagher might be able to persuade Park to talk about reports that a Nixon campaign aide put the arm on him for a $100,000 contribution.

But another source insisted the committee was eager to get Park's testimony about the congressmen he paid off, regardless of their politics. We have seen no evidence that the committee is taking a partisan approach to the investigation.

It is no secret, however, that the Democrats would welcome a few more Republicans joining them in the hot water. Some Democrats are searching intently for Republicans who may have accepted gifts or favors from the South Koreans. Here are the names of those who are under scrutiny:

•RICHARD NIXON: There are persistent but unproven reports that the Nixon campaign received some laundered cash from South Koreans. So far as we can find out, Nixon was not directly involved in any transactions with Korean payoff men.

•SPIRO AGNEW: We reported last May that the former vice president had teamed up with Tongsun Park in London on some business deals. We have no evidence, however, that their joint ventures were illegal.

•SEN. JAKE GARN, R-Utah: He flew to South Korea in 1975, all expenses paid, as the guest of a foundation that allegedly is a government front. But there is no reason to believe he was aware of its government ties.

•REP. WILLIAM BROOMFIELD, R-Mich.: Press reports, quoting "a source close to Tongsun Park," alleged that the Korean influence peddler gave Broomfield $1,000. The congressman has denied the allegation and has opened his records to both the Justice Department and House Ethics Committee. The records contain no trace of the alleged $1,000.

•REP. ALBERT QUIE, R-Minn.: He joined a congressional delegation that visited South Korea in 1969 and brought back a free suit and a pair of cufflinks. He priced the booty and found the suit worth $50, the cufflinks $3.45. But unhappily, the suit "didn't fit" so he gave it to Good Will Industries, he told us.

•REP. LARRY WINN, R-Kan.: Some Korean businessmen called upon him in his office in 1972. Afterward, one of them returned to the office and left a plain envelope. It was stuffed with $100 bills. Winn says he didn't even take time to count

Several Republicans also received small donations from Park, usually $500. It is unlikely that Park came to their offices, flashing his Korean CIA credentials and offering them bribes. All the congressmen we have interviewed, Republicans and Democrats alike, believed Park was a businessman. It was perfectly legal, therefore, for them to accept campaign contributions.

The House Ethics Committee, meanwhile, made a provisional approach to Gallagher to meet privately with his elusive friend, Tongsun Park. The committee wanted Gallagher to arrange to put a committee representative in touch with Park. Then the committee agent, not Gallagher, would conduct the interrogation.

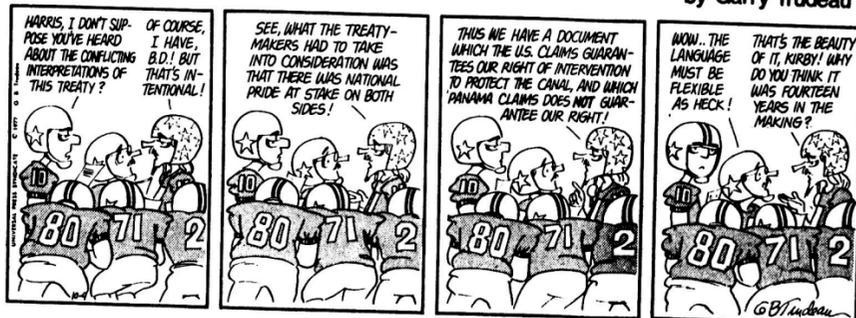

The bearded Gallagher went to prison, in a headline case, for tax fraud. Now he is back in the headlines as a Koreagate figure. According to sources close to the investigation, he is eager to put the allegations behind him so he can begin a new life.

Footnote: We made repeated calls to Gallagher, who refused to come to the telephone. His attorney, ex-New Jersey prosecutor George Koelzer, curtly declined comment. Committee spokesmen also refused to discuss the case.

WASHINGTON WHIRL: A fund-raising committee, sponsored by such conservative luminaries as Sens. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., James McClure, R-Idaho, Clifford Hansen, R-Wyo., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, has raised $73,295. The committee spent almost all the money on its own expenses; only $350 has been distributed to candidates. A spokesman explained that the money is going into fund-raising, rather than being distributed to candidates, because the candidates haven't formally announced yet.

Taking issue

I attended the first performance given by Tom Paxton at the Black Sheep Repertory Theater Monday night, and take issue with Steve Szilagyi's review.

Tom Paxton was, and still is, ranked at the top of the folk singers' hierarchy. His songs, both old and new, are still relevant today and present a refreshing, cynical, yet truthful commentary on the state of the world. Many people consider his songs to be a welcome alternative to the mindless crap that is all too prevalent in today's more popular music forms.

That Paxton chose to sing mostly old songs is a credit to him, I feel. They were written in the 60's, true, but the fact that they still apply to the 70's should have some meaning, which the audience appeared to understand and appreciate. Szilagyi obviously did not. He must live in a world free from war, injustice and inhumanity. I can think of no other logical explanation for his comments on Paxton, and Phil Ochs for that matter.

Szilagi would do well to listen to both of these men's music and note the timelessness of their words.

VIEWPOINT: LIFE'S CHOICES

Are human beings machines?

By MONTE VANDEUSEN
"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave
Awaits the inevitable hour:
The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Thomas Gray indeed paints a grim picture of life in "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard." We are told that as we pursue our various academic paths we are to be striving for realism, not pessimism, in our thinking and lives. As I reflect on three years at Michigan State, however, I can't help but wonder if Gray isn't right. What I've been taught seems to be an excellent basis for being negative. Our entire techno-scientific culture teaches us that all events are mechanical functions.

In the past, men believed they were free and could choose between two alternatives. Today, we are taught that all our choices are pre-conditioned and predetermined. People are reduced to complex machines, programmed by an infinite number of genetic and environmental factors. Every choice we make is predetermined by the parents we were born to and the circumstances we have experienced in the past.

We are taught that man has evolved from a primordial fireball of mass and energy. Every atom and molecule owes its ultimate existence to this fireball. The earth was slowly formed and life eventually appeared. First, in a very primitive form and finally evolving into the most complex form yet, human beings. Life is but a complex chain of mathematical equations. Man is merely the most marvelous machine chance and spontaneity has yet produced.

But what about my dreams of being a person? Am I really just a complex sophisticated number? Are all men just numbers? What about human rights? Rather than helping me "find myself," my education has told me to stop. Trying to find myself is absurd. There is no self to find. I am a machine, and I must face that reality.

What can I say? What can I do? I could leave the University, but that's running away. Can I face the system—Ph.D.'s and all—or is the system right? I don't want to believe that I am a machine! But if I am, is it worth it? Why come to college? Why live? Why should I endure pain, evil, and manipulation if there's no reason to live except to die?

If my educators are right,

"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave
Awaits the inevitable hour:
The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Is it worth living only to die?

Largest $$ summer filmic history

By STATE NEWS and Associated Press
With the help of such financial blockbusters as Deep Throat, The Spy Who Loved Me, and of course, WarGames, the box offices of the nation's movie theaters took in more money than in any summer in history.

WarGames is the big money-maker of 1977, each reporting record sums to the force behind and accounting at 20th Century-Fox. As of Wednesday, the U.S. & Canada box office receipts for the George Lucas film totaled $19,488 — out of which the studio receives a netting of $104 million in rentals.

This latter figure is a scant $16 million off the record held by Universal's Jaws, and the star space opera is expected to pass that 1975 mark in a matter of weeks and become the year's box office champion.

20th Century-Fox's summer, also was brightened by the somewhat more modest but substantial income from The Other Side of Midnight. The glossy romance based on Sidney Sheldon's bestseller has grossed some $33 million in weeks of release. A surprise bonanza has been a re-release of Mel Brooks' Young Frankenstein, which accumulated a gross of $17 million.

It looks as if we'll have one of the two top grossers of the summer in The Spy Who Loved Me, said Mike Medavoy, West Coast production manager for United Artists. The latest adventure for late Ian Fleming's secret agent is shaping up as the most successful James Bond picture of the year.

Medavoy spoke more guardedly of the returns of two other highly touted UA releases, A Bridge Too Far so far has a domestic gross of $10 million, below our expectations," said Medavoy. "It's too early to tell about New York, New York, but the box office gross has been $15 million." The production chief expressed confidence that the ambitious Martin Scorsese musical would eventually at least break even.

Happier news for Medavoy and his studio is the continuing success of Woody Allen's Annie Hall, by far the most profitable of the comedian's films. It has grossed over $20 million in the U.S. and Canada alone, and is opening strongly in Europe.

Meanwhile, Columbia Pictures has reported a box office gross of $50 million for the heavily promoted The Deep. The studio is also anticipating great success abroad for the aquatic thriller. Unfortunately, Columbia's expensive March or Die was a disaster for the studio, with many theatres reporting substantially low turnouts for the Foreign Legion melodrama.

Universal had an unexpected hit in Smokey and the Bandit, which the studio had expected to be just another Burt Reynolds good 'ol boy chase flick. Instead, the film will earn some $30 million in rentals, making it the studio's biggest success since Jaws.

Indeed, the success of Smokey helped ease the disappointment of the track records of Universal's other summer pictures. Rollercoaster failed to perform as expected, MacArthur never caught on with either war buffs or movie fans, and The Last Remake of Beau Geste is continuing to do slow business.

William Friedkin's $21 million Sorcerer, jointly financed and released by Universal and Paramount, opened in late June and sank without a trace. The film may eventually be remarketed under a different title.

Another bomb was director John Boorman's woe-filled Exorcist II: The Heretic, from Warner Brothers. The $14 million sequel did record business during its initial few days in release, but extremely negative critical notices and adverse word-of-mouth served to ward off ticket-buyers. Warners had better luck with two modestly produced programmers, One on One and Greased Lightning, both of which were piling up substantial grosses by late summer.

Detroit subway plans attacked

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Oakland County, Mich., Road Commissioner John Gnaou Jr. last week urged Congress to freeze all funds for new U.S. subways, calling the proposed $2.4 billion 8.3-mile Detroit subway "simply not cost effective."

Gnaou appeared before the House Public Works Surface Transportation Subcommittee with Paul Van Roekel, chief technical administrator of the road commission.

Gnaou said a Tri-County Alternate Plan using buses and new light commuter rails on existing surface rights-of-way "proves the transit needs of our region can be met with $820 million total."

"The Tri-County Alternate is one example of an efficient, affordable transit system for a three-county area of more than 3 million people," he said, charging the Southeast Michigan Transportation Authority has placed greater emphasis on job-producing programs than on the cost-effective ways of carrying passengers.

President Carter indicated he is opposed to new subways and the Urban Mass Transportation Administrator Richard Page told Detroit that "in no uncertain terms that there will be only $600 million" for the Southeast Michigan regional system, so it should scale down its plans, Gnaou said.

Gnaou also denounced the Detroit Free Press for insisting on the subway system and editorializing that "UMTA was exercising 'bureaucratic perversity.'"

Gnaou urged Congress to retain a separate federal highway trust fund to be used for the road construction and maintenance, not mass transportation.

Thompson said that enforcement of that stipulation would be "virtually impossible."

"If the helmet law is repealed, we'll probably see many experienced cyclists continuing to wear helmets," he said. "They know how important that protection is."

Helmet law repeal set

LANSING (UPI) — The Michigan Driver and Traffic Safety Education Association says legislation pending in the state House to repeal the motorcycle helmet law for adults is the product of a small, well-organized group but is not supported by the general public.

"The people of Michigan want to keep the helmet law," said Larry Thompson, president of the association of driver education instructors.

"To my knowledge, not a single physician, state official, law enforcement agency, community group, newspaper or television station wants to see passage of House Bills 4303 and 4305."

Thompson said the only ones who want the helmet law repealed are "a few well-organized and very vocal motorcyclists."

Under the legislation, 16- and 17-year-olds would still be required to wear helmets, but

But young and inexperienced cyclists won't buy and won't wear helmets. They won't appreciate the risk of injury."

Fed-up fireman takes joyride

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — A fed-up fireman who borrowed a city fire truck and took his wife and daughter on a joyride has been found guilty in municipal court of a high misdemeanor.

Judge Travilla Daines sentenced Gerald Hughes to serve 60 days in jail, but suspended the term. He was ordered to pay a $50 fine and court costs of $100 for conviction of driving a motor vehicle without authorization and without intent to steal.

At the time, Hughes said he was prompted to take the truck because the city ordered him to repay about $2,300 for sick days to which, the city says, he was not entitled.

Winterize cabin against wildlife

By JAMES V. HIGGINS
LANSING (UPI) — Porcupines might be low in ferocity, but they can be high in destructiveness.

Cabin owners would be wise to take precautions against the slow but persistent animals before closing up for the winter, said an MSU wildlife specialist.

"Porcupines are among the most destructive wildlife when it comes to doing structural damage," said Glenn Dudderar, an MSU extension worker.

"Bats, mice and squirrels may also get into a cabin and make a mess, but the porcupine is the one that's likely to destroy it."

Porcupines are attracted to wood or other porous materials that have soaked up salt from human hands. A newly built cabin is a special treat to them, but they will also gnaw on boat oars, ax handles, windowsills, door handles, doorknobs, siding, fenceposts — almost anything.

Not that the smaller pests are completely innocuous. Squirrels can get into a cabin and tear up pillows, tip things over and generally get into everything. Bats may soil a cabin with their droppings and urine. Wild mice seeking shelter may gnaw on wood structures or furniture and shred up fabrics to make nests.

Dudderar said problems with the smaller rodents can be avoided by making sure they have no way to get in. Seal up even the tiniest hole and cover ventilators with one-quarter inch mesh hardware cloth.

Porcupines, however, pose a more difficult problem, he said. "If you know for sure that there is one crusty old porcupine that is single-handedly eating your cabin away, trapping and disposing of it might take care of the problem," Dudderar said.

"Chances are, though, that getting rid of one porcupine would only make room for another to move right in. So you're better off to try keeping the porcupines away from the structure."

That, he said, is best done with a fence — but it will have to be specially constructed.

"A tightly strung fence, with the wire stretched snugly between the posts, won't even slow the porcupine down," he said. "It will be up and over it with hardly a pause. But a loose, sagging fence will foil it."

Fence wire should be strung on posts in a C-shape, with both ends of the C pointing away from the cabin. The porcupine will be prevented from going under, and the curved top will turn it away if it tries to go over.

Squirrels facing competition

By DeLINDA KARLE
State News Staff Writer

Some MSU squirrels may have difficulty this fall collecting acorns for their winter supply.

MSU has been shipping acorns collected from campus trees to J. Frank Schmidt and Son Co. nursery in Oregon to help them propagate the English Oak tree.

"This species was made famous in literature," said Milton Baron, director of Campus Park and Planning at MSU. "The forest of Nottingham in Robin Hood was made up of this species," he said.

English Oak trees are widely used on campus and elsewhere in landscaping. Examples on campus can be found along Wilson Road, by Agriculture Hall and by Shaw Hall.

The tree is prolific in Europe, Spain, North Africa and the eastern United States. A few years before World War II, some oak trees were transplanted to an MSU nursery.

Best acorns sent to Oregon

"We were impressed that they grew as well in Michigan as they did on the eastern seaboard," said Baron.

Meanwhile, Oregon and the Schmidt Co. was interested in the English Oak for propagation. Due to the soil and the long growing season in Oregon, the nursery was able to produce quality plant material faster than many other places in the United States. The Schmidt Co. specialized in establishing seedlings and making them available to other nurseries for maturing.

Because a special type of propagation is used for the English Oak tree — budding — the nursery set up a collaborative agreement with MSU.

Acorns sent from MSU are used to start seedlings grown in Oregon. After two seasons, when the seedlings are approximately two to three feet tall, a bud from a desirable parent tree is inserted under the bark of the seedling near the base.

In a year, after the bud has taken hold, the rest of the seedling is cut away. The tree can be sold to other nurseries for maturing in two years. A few years later the tree will be ready for the market.

Baron said that budding is also used for the propagation of fruit trees and rose bushes.

"There are a lot of factors still unknown in the propagation of English Oak trees," he said. "Horticulturists are still experimenting with the same problems that have already been solved for other species."

Baron said Schmidt Co. uses all the acorns MSU can supply. This year MSU sent about 200 pounds.

The acorns are hand-picked before they fall to the ground by workers from the MSU tree crew, Baron said. The acorns sent to Oregon must be slightly green.

"The squirrels shouldn't suffer too much," he said. "We have avenues of these trees, but only use acorns from three or four of the best trees."

In exchange for the acorns, the nursery sends financial gifts to MSU which are used for plant improvements and research on campus. This money is also used at Hidden Lake Gardens in the Irish Hills, a nature reserve administered by MSU.

TOUR TO DEVELOP RELATIONS WITH COLLEGES

Jordanian university president visits

By JEANNE BARON
State News Staff Writer

"I consider my visit to MSU a homecoming because it revived so many memories," the president of a Jordanian University said in an interview recently.

Adnan Badran, president of Yarmouk University in Amman, visited campus last week during a tour aimed at developing relations with U.S. colleges and universities.

He said that eventually, Yarmouk would like to exchange faculty and students with U.S. institutions and perhaps conduct joint seminars or consultations.

MSU is well known in many areas where relations could be developed, he said. Yarmouk is especially interested in the University's colleges of agriculture, business and engineering.

"Our purpose here is an exploratory type of thing," he explained. "We want to see where we could profit from MSU's experiences and establish colleges in those three areas."

Badran said that as part of Yarmouk's enrichment program, the university would like to expand from about 1,300 students to 20,000.

"We're going through the same growth that MSU did and we think we can learn from it," he said.

Yarmouk University plans to eventually send about 500 graduate students to the United States for doctorates and then bring them back to Jordan as staff members. The students will come to the United States on a full scholarship from Yarmouk, he said.

Currently, about 80 Jordanian students are studying in this country, including eight at MSU. Two of these are doctoral candidates in chemistry and engineering.

"I'm very much impressed with the progress MSU has made since I was here in 1963," he said. "I requested that this University be included in my visit because there are so many areas for us to learn from."

Badran said that he is very interested in MSU's extension service and would like to develop one in Jordan.

"Our country would like to consult with MSU for such a service where we could convey ourselves to the people to raise their social and economic welfare," he said.

As an example, he cited MSU's water recycling program for irrigation as an extension service Yarmouk officials are interested in developing in Jordan.

He also said that development of new programs at Yarmouk and enlargement of the University is part of the emphasis on education in Jordan.

"Education in Jordan is an industry; Jordanians thrive for it, and our economy is moving because of it," he said.

Education is an important part of the economy because it allows Jordanians to get jobs outside the country and return to invest in Jordan, Badran explained.

"There is so much development in the Middle East that there is a need for manpower, especially skilled manpower," he said.

"Jordanians save the money they earn abroad and then come back and start businesses in Jordan."

Badran said that part of the purpose of his visit is to create a better understanding between the United States and Jordan.

"Relations between the United States and Jordan have always been good," he said, "but they're getting stronger and stronger."

And through President Jimmy Carter's administration, the ties are even closer because the President is doing his best to settle the problems in the Middle East and develop stronger relations, Badran commented.

"I feel the Carter Administration has been frank and straightforward," he said.

"Carter has asked about a Palestinian home, and right now he has the trust and confidence of the Middle Eastern nations."

Badran added that he feels the time is right to end the turmoil in the Middle East because for the first time the Arab governments are anxious for a peaceful settlement.

"And Jordan really has an important role to play in Middle Eastern politics because it has never been an extremist country, which is important for a peaceful settlement," he said.

"Also, the placement of Jordan in the heart of the Arab world puts emphasis on its role."

RHAJ increases jurisdiction

By KAREN E. SHERIDAN

The MSU Residence Halls Association Judiciary (RHAJ) will have increased decision-making authority this year, according to member Kary Moss. Positions are open for six new members.

The decision-making powers of RHAJ were revised in June when the MSU Board of Trustees approved an amendment to Article IV of the Academic Freedom Report.

Previously enabling RHAJ only to enact a warning or probation for non-legal offenses by residence hall students, the article now provides the judiciary with the authority to withdraw the privilege of operating an automobile on campus.

RHAJ may also take away the privilege of representing a living unit in residence hall or inter-residence hall events.

Subject to the approval of the Vice President for Student Affairs and Services, RHAJ may recommend that an offender be assigned to a new room within the residence hall system or be moved out of the residence hall system.

"These revisions will help RHAJ be much more effective in dealing with student conflicts," Moss commented.

RHAJ heard 21 cases last year, according to Moss, and judiciary members, an increased case load in 1977-78.

RHAJ effectiveness was inhibited last year by its lack of minority representation, according to Moss.

The six new members needed to complete RHAJ's nine-member board will be selected on the basis of their concern and enthusiasm by existing members and faculty advisor Mike Nunin.

Applicants will be asked to participate in a series of individual and group interviews and must apply before Oct. 17 in the office of Judicial Programs, 155 Student Services Bldg.

MSU's Cyclotron Lab now nationally famous

By PETE BRONSON
Late News Staff Writer

Wearing blue jeans, a sport coat and hiking boots, nuclear physicist Henry Blosser looks like part of the construction crew building the new cyclotron rather than the man who designed it.

Since he first came to MSU in 1962 to plan and build the university's first cyclotron, Blosser and the MSU cyclotron laboratory have risen to world prominence in the field of nuclear research.

With a $400,000 grant from the National Science Foundation (NSF), Blosser has begun direct construction on the new cyclotron which he says is ten times more powerful than the original and could be the most versatile device of its kind in the world.

The grant is part of a $1.2 million allocation from the NSF for the development of the new facility. With the new facility, MSU's board of trustees has renamed the Cyclotron Lab the "MSU/NSF Heavy Ion Laboratory" in an effort to reflect the partnership between the University and the NSF in development of the new facility.

However, Blosser explained that the name change refers to the administrative unit and not to existing or future facilities.

"To avoid confusion we are not emphasizing the name change. The buildings will still be called the Cyclotron Lab," he said.

The magnetic core for the new unit has already been completed and underwent testing last May. Weighing 100 tons and containing 25 miles of special wiring, the magnet is the largest ever built and will enable Blosser and his team of physicists to accelerate atomic projectiles with a much heavier atomic mass than conventional cyclotrons.

Blosser likens the projectiles to a rubber ball swung on the end of a rubber band.

"The stronger the rubber band, the faster you can swing the ball before it breaks free. So the stronger the magnet at the core of the cyclotron the faster we can accelerate the particles it controls. Also, it enables us to work with much heavier atomic nuclei," he said.

In terms of magnetic field, the new unit will be 100 times as powerful as the earth's magnetic field and twice as powerful as the old cyclotron.

While some view the new cyclotron as a promising hope in the search for energy alternatives, Blosser, though hopeful, remains cautious about making predictions.

"The research we are doing could reveal an extremely important area for resources of new energy, but too little is known yet. There is no experimental confirmation available upon which to base hopes for an energy alternative," he said.

It is exactly such research that Blosser plans when the new facility is complete.

"There is no much we really don't understand concerning the laws which govern atomic nuclei. With the new cyclotron we hope to fill in the holes and possibly even discover new laws of physics," he said.

With the present project well under way, Blosser plans the first trial run for the summer of 1979 and predicts routine operation of the new facility by early 1980.

Blosser and his associate Morton Gordon have already completed preliminary plans for a third, and even more powerful cyclotron with a capacity of 800 million volts (MEVs). The unit now under construction has a capacity of 500 MEVs and the old unit has a capacity of 50 MEVs.

GOAL OF $17 MILLION

fund-raising campaign continues

By PATRICIA LaCROIX
State News Staff Writer

With the beginning of a new school year, most students are thinking primarily about getting a fresh start on their academic careers and perhaps raising their grade point average a bit.

University administrators are busy continuing their efforts in the first MSU fund-raising campaign, initiated early during last year's term with a goal of $17 million.

Leslie Scott, vice president for university development, said campaign workers will be continuing their efforts to solicit funds from major donors in Michigan and nationwide through the year.

The funds are being raised for the betterment of the University in different areas, including:

- $11 million for the construction of the non-academic portions of the long-awaited University State Center for the Performing Arts.
 - $2.75 million for the construction of the first phase of a new MSU museum to be built on Harrison Road.
 - $1.5 million for book and microfilm additions to the Library, as well as expansions in the audio-visual holdings and study-area improvements, and
 - $1.75 million for the establishment of additional Endowed Faculty Chairs in several academic areas.
- By the end of spring term, $800,000 had been raised through faculty and University personnel sources. At the time, the campaign had just about run its course on the University level, but an additional $100,000 was collected through the summer. This brought the latest total from the University community to $900,000, a figure which exceeded original expectations by 75 percent.

The mid-Michigan campaign is also well under way by now, Scott added, with the national phase, headed by ex-MSU President John Hannah, scheduled to begin sometime this month. Scott said they expect to draw at least $1 million through the national campaign.

Last week, MSU President Clifton R. Wharton Jr. announced the first two major donations in the newest phase of the campaign.

A grant of $500,000 has been given by the Ray Herrick Foundation for unrestricted use in the program.

President Wharton also announced that the Jack F. Wolfram Foundation has contributed $208,000 to be used to equip and furnish the "green room" of the State Center for the Performing Arts.

In addition, Scott said there are "20 or more" contribution proposals in the working stages with some in the "leadership" category (donations of $100,000) and others in the "major donors" category (donations of $10,000).

Names of potential donors cannot be released until the transaction is confirmed, Scott said, as publicizing any names or figures may jeopardize the contribution.

"We are quite pleased with the progress being made," Scott said last week. "If a few major donations come in, things will be looking really well. But really, we should know more about where we stand in a month or so."

Academic Council holds meeting today

The first fall meeting of the Academic Council will be held at 3:15 today in the Conference Room of the International Center.

Agenda items include amendments which would attempt to clarify the "delegated authority" aspects of the "Bylaws for Academic Governance" and other which deals with student representation on committees.

The Council will also consider a new set of Athletic Council bylaws and hear a report from the University Committee on Curriculum.

MSU President Clifton R. Wharton Jr. and MSU provost Clarence L. Winder are scheduled to address the Council.

A little more than lifelike...

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A man shopper may have had a shock of her life when she reached over to feel the sweater of a department store mannequin.

She suddenly realized that the flesh of the mannequin was warm. She screamed and came out two feet off the floor," said Beverly Kadow, who works in a living doll.

Kadow says her specialty is robot modeling, working alongside a regular mannequin and holding a pose for up to 40 minutes. Sometimes she winks slightly shifts her pose to entertain passing shoppers.

"It's just great fun to hear people arguing about whether or not you're real," she said. "That's the nicest compliment a freeze or robot model can get, and you have to fight to keep from breaking the stone face to thank them."

Correction

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The Associated Press erroneously reported Monday that if a Cincinnati school tax levy fails this year its schools would have to close this month.

The account said the schools could be shut until after the new budget year beginning Jan. 1.

Cincinnati school officials say they may exhaust education funds and could be forced to close next fall if new funds are not available at that time. They do not expect any closings before then.

gain the Stones Roll: Third live album shines

By BILL HOLDSHIP
State News Reviewer

THE ROLLING STONES: LOVE YOU LIVE

Rolling Stones Records
(1977)

By this review LOUD!
There's a paradox for you. I've known friends who claim they love rock 'n roll but don't care for the Rolling Stones. I know a woman who loves to dance.
She's a disco freak (Father, she does), and says that she loves rock music. She does,
she does, like The Stones.
"Why? Because they're to dance to!" Ask a stupid question...

The situation described above, though true, is logically impossible. Putting it quite simply, if a person doesn't like The Rolling Stones, that person probably doesn't like rock 'n roll. It's as simple as that because The Stones are rock 'n roll — the personification of what it's all about, and, in their own modest words, "THE GREATEST ROCK 'N ROLL
BAND IN THE WORLD." Love You Live, the band's third concert recording, proves that they plan to continue being nothing less (provided the Canadian government has no say in the matter).

One claim often made about rock in the '70s is that the music and the performers are no longer a revolutionary force.
This is true to the extent that rock has become too huge of a mainstream business — offering us such diversified acts as Kiss, Frampton, and Barry Manilow under the same title — to ever again represent what it once did. Despite the infractions, though, an undercurrent sense of the rock 'n roll spirit has remained alive, and The Stones seem determined to see that the spirit never dies.
Of course, the times have changed. The Stones were the foremost symbol of antithesis culture in the hectic '60s, and both their music and bohemian lifestyle represented the darker temper of that era. We can see why the "new" punk rockers owe a fond allegiance to The Stones, but, despite Johnny Rotten's ranting and raving, things just ain't what they used to be.

1965 — Dean Martin introduces them on ABC's Hollywood Palace, holding his nose, and making corny long hair jokes. And there they were in ten million living rooms; Jagger's lips felling the microphone, mumbling Willie Dixon's
"I Just Wanna Make Love To You," and Keith Richard looking like he was just minutes away from the embalming table even then. Man, they were not only ugly, they were scary.
EVIL was the word. That was the beginning, a period documented on the Get Live If You Want It LP.

1969 — The kiddies are growing up now, discontent is rampant, and a revolution seems imminent. The threat of violence is exploding in America, and the atmosphere is darkly tense. The Beatles are realizing that it's going to take a lot more than love and are preparing to let it be, but The Stones are there to reflect the tenseness of their music. It's a period of decadent anthems dealing with war, fear, paranoia, drugs, death, and even Lucifer, himself. The Stones howl us into the dreary '70s with "Gimme Shelter." It's history now, and you can hear it on the Get Your Ya Ya's Out LP.

1977 — And, as they sang on a recent LP, time waits for no
one. Critics have constantly accused them of sounding tired in this decade, an attack The Stones have defended by claiming they're now more concerned with concerts than with the studio. The one fault critics have found with the new LP is that it lacks relevancy because The Stones are no longer socially relevant.

Votapek warms up, opens music recitals

By KAREN E. SHERIDAN

Ralph Votapek commenced
the fifty-first season of MSU Department of Music faculty recitals Sunday night, with an exposition of Brahms' F minor Sonata, op. 5.

Votapek, a graduate of Northwestern University who studied at the Manhattan School of Music and at Juilliard, also played Haydn's Sonata in E Flat Major, Bartok's Two Roumanian Dances, op. 8a, and Ravel's Le Tombeau de Couperin.

While Sunday's performance marked Votapek's first public recital of the Brahms, he has been playing the Ravel for 21 years, he said.

"Most people would say that the Ravel is my best," he commented. "But I wouldn't necessarily agree." "I just don't specialize," he said.

But where specialization may have been lacking, flexibility was clearly evident as Votapek executed a series of pieces as varied in period as in mood.

According to Conrad Dona-kowski, Professor of Humanities, "Ralph Votapek is one of the greatest pianists in the world, and you don't need to say anything else."

The Votapek concert will be performed again this evening at 8 p.m. in the Music building auditorium.

A caring PBB documentary

By KATHY ESSELMAN
State News Reviewer

In Fielding's Thames Television documentary "The Poisoning of Michigan" will air on WKAR-TV (channel 7). The film stares at the site of chemical disaster caused by the 1973 contamination of Michigan feed with dibrominated biphenyl (B).
The film begins: dead cattle are shot,
rot, fall, the snowy winter yard is littered with the ble, deformed dead-victims their own food — black and against the white ground.
The only color is the red of hunters' vests.
Fielding's calm understated narration of the problem and its continuing rampations, run over this tersely edited film of cattle being sifted. A dirgelike theme, characterized by a throbbing chord, underscores the dread mood.

The quick-cut montage illustrates Fielding's narration by wing diseased cattle being transported to market, cutting hamburger being processed,
then cutting to a customer
ing a polystyrene-wrapped ket of hamburger out of a market meat cooler.

This quick-cutting teaser establishes the tone, subject
ter, style and editorial nce of the documentary. It interpoints hot imagery with detached, coolly profession-one of Fielding's narration presentation.

The emotional engagement
empted by this slickly-shot edited teaser is deliberate of a characteristic element of British documentaries, which,
like American documentar-
s, take a definite editorial

stance. British print and film journalism is, by tradition, more partisan and pugnacious than its American counterpart.

Fielding reviews the scope of the disaster and analyzes the cause, vividly illustrating his narration. He reminds viewers that nobody grasped the scope of the disaster and for the first time in the documentary underscores a quote he is reading by projecting a copy of it on the screen.

"PBB thus far has not been shown to be the cause of any identifiable human ailments."

This mixture of print with film is a characteristic feature of British documentary, as Fielding pointed out in an interview last Friday: "If movies are getting into sluddy bits it breaks it up, and keeps it from being endless talking heads... And anyway nobody could say we were dreaming it up."

Fielding avoids wringing viewer emotions. He balances highly charged emotional topics, such as an interview with Tom Butler who has suffered the physical symptoms of PBB poisoning and the case of Ron Thomas and his family, who have also suffered a full range of symptoms from memory loss to narcolepsy, with Dr.
Irving Selikoff's elucidation of his research results on the effect of PBB on the population of Michigan.

Fielding maintains a persistently human viewpoint throughout. He has a detached, if not skeptical attitude toward organizations primarily concerned with protecting their own interests.

For reasons of length, Fielding cut out of the documentary
a reflection by farmer Rick

Halbert upon the response of some researchers at MSU on research he proposed. They said they didn't want to get involved in a squabble between a farmer and a feed company.

Fielding felt no such reluctance. He traveled from London to Michigan just to tell a story.

It's good it worked out that way, because as of now there has not been an American documentary devoted to this topic, and Fielding's careful, competent and beautifully photographed documentary is,
to date, the only major piece of telegenic journalism devoted to this story.

It is sad, and more than a little disappointing to think that PBS chose to import rather than do it themselves. It is more unfortunate that this is their prevailing notion of good programming. This documentary should have an American counterpart against which to judge its strengths.

Waits' 'Affairs'

By JOHN KAJANDER

Tom Waits: Foreign Affairs
Asylum 7E-1117

Well you can buy me a drink and I'll tell you what I see
And I'll give you a bargain from the edge of a maniac's dream
That buys a black widow spider with a riddle in his yarn
That's clinging to the furrow of a blindman's brow
I'll start talking from the brim on a thimble full of whiskey... from "Potters Field" by Tom Waits

Tom Waits is a true musical anachronism, with a style that beckons back to the beat poets and pop artists of the fifties a la Kerouac and Parker, not the cultural remnants like Elvis and the Fonz. Waits is a unique performer, with a voice best described as beyond repair due to years of chain smoking and general vocal chord abuse. He scruffs and grumbles his lyrics fiercely and his performances remind people of the great American loser, the dime street poet, a raconteur who has seen it all and will spill it to you for a jigger full of gin.

Waits' latest lp is his fifth, and his tradition of back street blues and endless searches for the heart of Saturday night remains. He receives help this time from drummer Shelly Manne and bassist Jim Hughart, both of whom worked on his last album, while Frank Vicari replaces Lew Tabakin on saxophone.
The album also is graced by the presence of Bette Midler who sings the counterpart on "I never talk to strangers," trumpet great Jack Sheldon, and Gene Cipriano, whose clarinet highlights the haunting "potters field," perhaps the highlight of the album.

Waits ambles through his compositions that range through lost dream in "muriel" to the worthless doubletalk that always rambles on and through "barber shop." A piece of further note is "Burma Shave": about a last ride in a Mustang going nowhere from the same place by two people who end up passing a bottle trying to pass a car and not quite making it. Waits' tunes are songs of desparation at times, and the songs of the good and hard times.

Tom Waits is an original performer and surveyor of what always seems to be missed and rejected by a public infatuated with success. For Tom Waits, it is more important to live life for what it's worth.

Countin one eyed jacks and whistling dixie in the car

His cigar Jack was noddin out and dreamin he was in a bar

Canadians in Cuba

Christmas in San Diego? How about Cuba? The University of Western Ontario (UWO) women's volleyball team will play a series of exhibition matches in Havana the week between Christmas and New Year's Day later this year.

"They are inviting teams to play the Scholaire Travel Organization (of Canada) works the exchange. We want to go someplace where it's warm," said Fran Wigston, head coach. "We travel every year to stay in training over the long Christmas holiday. It helps morale and team unity."

UWO, the outstanding squad in MSU's round-robin tournament on campus last Saturday, made similar trips to San Diego, Cal., and Germany the past two years. Wigston has had the team in the Canadian national collegiate finals each of her six previous seasons at the helm, winning three times.

"Most coaches go for tall people," she said. "I, too, go for height, but they must have agility and speed as well."

The combination is ably personified in Cindy Elliot, a graceful 6-foot-3 inch Canadian who has been heavily coaxed to join the national team but chooses, instead, to stay with Wigston and her UWO teammates.

"One of the girls went to school in the states but they are all from Canada," Wigston said. "We have a good high school program in London (Ontario) and the majority of the team is from Ontario."

Wigston played volleyball on the club level and coached in Canadian high schools before landing the job at UWO. She has been associated with the game for more than 20 years and is still enthusiastic about her sport.

"The game was nothing, with no strategy. It's changed in the last seven years and improved, especially in Canada," Wigston said, noting that the transition to international rules in 1967 helped speed volleyball's progress.

She constructed an obvious parallel between basketball and volleyball and anticipates a revolutionary change in the latter.

Sam Kajornsin practices what he preaches. Six weeks ago, MSU's first-year head field hockey coach talked out the "real balance" between offense and defense on the team and a command of the game's fundamentals, plus confidence and experience.

And now, on the eve of the 1977 opener? "We have a nice improvement in the basic skills, team morale is good and we've worked hard with the offense," he said. "This unit (defense) is much better than what we've had the two previous years."

Kajornsin has been the assistant coach for two seasons, in which the Spartans' trademark has been a good defense. This year, Kajornsin has developed a more powerful offense and the defense has given a boost with the addition of Karen Santoni, resulting in a more balanced squad and more experience on defense.

"She came to me and said she wanted to rejoin the team," Kajornsin said, after Santoni originally decided to bypass field hockey and concentrate on the winter's basketball season.

The outstanding fullback will make a good defense better. MSU led six shutouts in 13 games last fall and Santoni, along with Matti Lawson, Nancy Babcock and Lorie Fisselmann, will take the pressure off the offense.

Kajornsin is talking about the same people on the attack unit that talked about in August, Nancy Lyons, Kathy Eritano, Jennie Epeinger and Debbie Peven.

The Spartans averaged 2.5 goals per game last fall in running up a 9-3-1 mark which included a seven-game winning streak.

"The only real problem is that we don't have enough people to scrimmage and it's difficult to see the team's movement," Kajornsin said, "but the schedule is good."

After today's season debut, against Grand Valley State at 4 p.m. on Old College Field, MSU has two more games before facing the first tough test of the season Oct. 12 at Western Michigan.

Old College Field is located behind Jenison Fieldhouse, adjacent to the varsity baseball diamond, and there is no admission charge for MSU students.

Men's x-country beats Kent State

The MSU men's cross country team outran winless Kent State Saturday to even its record at 1-1, while Spartan senior Jeff Pullen recorded his second personal victory of the season.

Pullen ran the hilly, five mile course in 25:00, well over a minute ahead of his nearest competitor, Scott DePerro of Kent State, who finished second in 26:12.

MSU coach Jim Gibbard said of his squad in their 21-39 victory, "they're getting much better, but there's still a long way to go."

The Spartans had lost the previous weekend to powerful Notre Dame, but this time dominated the meet by finishing ten runners in the top 14.

Other Spartan runners placing Saturday were Steve Carlson, Tim Kerr, Tom Wright, Ted Unold, Tim Proulx, and Kevin Watkins.

MSU runs its next cross country meet Saturday at Northwestern. The next home run will be Friday, Oct. 21 at Forest Akers Golf Course.

MSU's women win in opener

"They ran the way they're supposed to—as a team," named woman's cross country coach Mark Pittman as he described the harriers' season ending victory Saturday. "They did better than I thought they would."

led by meet winner Cindy Adsworth, MSU's women dominated the "Badger-Spartan Invitational," scoring low only 21 points as they outdistanced both Wisconsin, with 35 points, which finished second in the Big Ten year and fourth in the nation, and Western Michigan, finishing with 85, in its first year of varsity competition.

The Spartans won five of the seven places in the 5000 meter race, as Wadsworth finished the distance in 18:56, only five seconds ahead of Wisconsin's powerful Mary Beth Spencer.

The victory over the Badgers was a big one for the team, especially morally. Says Pittman, "everybody is really enthused now, they're all psyched up."

Other MSU finishers were Lil Warnes in third place, Mary Ann Opalweski, fourth, Lisa Berry, sixth, Diane Culp, seventh, Kelly Spatz, ninth, and Cindy Wright in the tenth position.

MSU runs its second — and final — home meet this Saturday morning at the Forest Akers Golf Course at 10:00.

Bo expects aerial game

ANN ARBOR (UPI) — Michigan will have to make two dramatic adjustments this week as it returns to Big Ten play against cross-state rival Michigan State.

The Wolverines just came off the emotional 41-3 thrashing of intersectional opponent Texas A&M and will now be called upon to play another emotional game — one that could keep them from going to the Rose Bowl if they lose.

Coach Bo Schembechler's highly rated team also will be getting ready for a Spartan squad which it knows is going to throw the football after a week of intensive preparation against a team it figured was going to run the ball a lot.

"I'm not concerned that it's going to be an aerial game," Schembechler told his weekly press luncheon Monday. "I know it's going to be one."

"This is a good Michigan State team," he said. "The potential is there."

Like basketball, I think we'll see the big players and nothing will have to be done out the height of the net," Wigston said, suggesting that there may be two levels of the net with the height of the net for one level than the other.

Missing Christmas bothered one of UWO's players in the part of the annual excursion late Christmas morning.

"Now, as long as the kids are here Christmas eve, they don't mind," she said.

The mid-season trip, which includes the school's men's volleyball team and the women's basketball team, is the obvious high point of UWO's six-month, 70-match season. However, Wigston said that her team would not face the powerful Cuban national team.

Golf change

The Forest Akers East (nine-hole) course will be closed the remainder of the season Monday through Friday and to compensate the West (18-hole) course will allow golfers to pay the nine hole fee on the West course.

HUD vetoes loan for additional housing

By CHRIS KUCZYNSKI
State News Staff Writer

Plans for the development of five additional student housing cooperatives in the East Lansing area were stifled last week when the MSU Student Housing Corporation (SHC) was denied a $6 million loan from the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

"It's a great disappointment," said SHC board member Susan Brownlee. "We invested 90 hours of work per week for the last six weeks into the project."

Under the title of the College Housing Program, HUD offers housing loans every year to college cities that can prove need.

SHC is a non-profit organization comprised of residents which services cooperatives in the East Lansing area.

The SHC was granted a loan in 1972 under the HUD program but then President Richard M. Nixon decided the funds could be put to better use for military purposes and the money was never allocated.

This year HUD granted the loan to cooperatives in Ann Arbor and to Berkeley, California.

Among some of the locations that were under consideration for renovation into co-ops was the Inn America, 2736 E. Grand River Ave.

The Student Housing Management Company, a spin-off company from the SHC, has a nine month lease on the Inn and is currently operating the Inn as a motel and apartment structure.

Brownlee attributed the loss of the loan to the lack of data available on the type of housing deficiencies in the East Lansing area needed to convince HUD that their need is greater than other college cities.

Brownlee said the demand for cooperative living in the East Lansing area is so great that if the five sights would have been developed into co-ops, there would have been enough people to fill them four times over.

Currently, there are nine co-ops in the East Lansing area housing over 200 people.

Brownlee said that though the loan was denied, they are still interested in three of the five properties and their next step is to attempt to procure more conventional means of financing, through banks and land contracts.

The SHC plans to submit another application for a HUD loan in the spring and Brownlee hopes that they will be able to obtain more data next year so that they will be able to present a stronger case before HUD.

Bakke ruling protested

By TERRY PRZYBYLSKI
State News Staff Writer

Three representatives of legal and civil rights groups called on the citizens of Michigan to protest against the California Supreme Court decision in the Allan Bakke "reverse discrimination" case at a recent news conference in East Lansing.

The three speakers, appearing before reporters at the United Ministries in Higher Education, 1118 S. Harrison, spoke out against the California court's decision which said that Bakke, a 37-year-old white man, was subjected to unconstitutional discrimination by the University of California's Medical School at Davis. Bakke claimed the school denied him admission while admitting minority students who had lower test scores under an affirmative action program designed to increase the number of minorities and women at the medical school.

The case is now before the U.S. Supreme Court, which will hear the case within two weeks. The three spokespersons said that if the Court rules in Bakke's favor, similar affirmative action programs may be eliminated.

Phil Hutchins, speaking on behalf of the Michigan Coalition to Overturn the Bakke Decision (MCOBD), told the reporters that "if the Bakke case is affirmed by the Supreme Court, all affirmative action programs will be jeopardized."

"The major goals of MCOBD are to educate and mobilize the people of Michigan, particularly the minority community and its supporters, to bring pressure to bear on judicial and governmental officials not to abandon the policy of equal opportunity embodied in affirmative action," Hutchins said.

Mary Dryovaje, representing the National Lawyer's Guild, said that affirmative action programs were still necessary to eliminate racist and sexist attitudes in American society.

"If whites are forced to work side by side with minorities, they will begin to better understand the problems of racism," Dryovaje said.

Hutchins agreed with Dryovaje, saying that "affirmative action as a concept is based on the recognition that America is a racist, sexist society. It is designed to correct past and present practices of segregation and discrimination."

Paul Curtis, speaking for the National Conference of Black Lawyers and the Black American Law Students Association, said the effect of the California court's ruling, if upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, would tell minorities and women that "they can't get remedial programs to overcome past vestiges of discrimination."

When asked what would happen if the governmental power granted in favor of minorities and women under affirmative action programs were ever usurped and used against such groups in the future, Dryovaje replied that such actions could be stifled by "popular pressure directed against the government."

Curtis said that affirmative action programs would be a temporary measure lasting only until no longer needed to eliminate discrimination.

There would be affirmative action programs only as long as they are needed for minorities to get into the mainstream of American life," Curtis said.

CUSTODY TRIAL OF BLIND WOMAN CONTINUES

Witness testifies Gill was a neglectful mother

By DIANE COX
State News Staff Writer

Heads perked up and people leaned forward in their chairs in Ingham County probate court late Monday as a former friend of Linda Gill's charged her with being a "filthy" housekeeper and a neglectful mother.

It was the fourth day of the trial of Gill, a blind woman trying to regain custody of her three young sons after a two year absence. Things seemed fairly routine until Kenneth LaClear took the stand. He had requested to be allowed to testify.

LaClear said that he originally moved in with Gill and her ex-husband Whitney Codling Jr. The relationship between Gill and LaClear eventually developed to "boyfriend-girlfriend" status, LaClear testified. After Gill separated from her husband, she and LaClear shared an apartment from July 7 to August 20, 1975, he said.

"Several times I was living with my folks because I couldn't take her attitude about the kids," LaClear said. "She didn't care one way or another if she had the kids except for the child support."

He claimed Gill often left the children alone and when he criticized her for doing so, her reaction was "nonchalant."

LaClear said that he had to do the cooking and cleaning for the children. He testified that Gill didn't change the baby's diapers and that she left dirty clothes and dishes lying around the apartment.

Gill once told him that she wanted her "total freedom, and that Whitney could have the kids," LaClear testified. He added that in September 1975, a month before she fled to Berkeley, California, to look for a job, Gill told him that she wanted to go to California to get a clean start and that she would leave her children with her mother in Lansing.

When Gill was questioned earlier in the day about previous references to someone named "Ken," she testified that LaClear had not lived with her but had stayed there a few times over a three-week period.

She said that she had never left her children alone and that she never told "Ken" that she didn't want her children. She has maintained throughout the trial that she always intended to return to Lansing for them. She has also maintained that LaClear, along with her ex-husband, injured one of her children and herself. LaClear testified that he looked after the children "like a father." LaClear will take the stand for cross-examination today, in what is expected to be the last day of the trial.

Classes in motor skills set up for preschoolers

A series of classes designed to promote the development of motor skills in preschoolers will be sponsored by the MSU Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation beginning Thursday.

Children aged two to five will be able to improve their skills in throwing, catching, hopping, skipping, running, rhythmic ability, eye-hand coordination and the dramatic use of movement by participating in various exercises.

Classes last one hour and will be limited to 16 students.

Children will be enrolled for the 1977-78 school year. Vacations will coincide with those of the MSU schedule.

Parents have the option of choosing classes that meet once or twice a week. Fees are $35 a quarter for classes meeting twice a week and $20 for those meeting once a week.

Openings are still available for children four and five years old. Applications and scheduling information may be obtained in room 38 Women's IM Building.

COMPUTER LABORATORY TOURS

The Computer Laboratory staff will conduct tours of the Computer Center for new users of the MSU computing facility. Each tour consists of a slide presentation, a discussion of the function and operation of the Computer Laboratory, and a walking tour of the building. The tours start in Room 215 at the following times.

'Stones rolling on with 'Love You Live'

 a period when rock 'n roll came close to death. The album perfectly describes what means in the '70s, namely experimentation with the idiom, and nothing else. The Stones went to Toronto for one week to record this album. One week in Toronto, and they were able to put the entire Canadian government in the state of a dither, not to mention being a part of the wreckage of the Minister's marriage. The album opens with a version of "Honky Tonk Women" that out-rocks the Ya Ya's version, and they're immediately into "If You Can't Rock Me." The Stones prove they can, will, and always have with a funky version of "Get Off My Cloud" that is as brilliantly polished as the original was brilliantly raw.

Jagger is in the forefront as usual, Charlie Watts proves that he is still the world's greatest rock drummer, but the album still belongs to Keith Richard. Keith, the quintessential rock star (which is why, it is rumored, he has to sell heroin to support himself), who by just standing there with ax in hand is more divinely debauch than Kiss and all the punk rockers combined, plays guitar like he never has before, and he begins to cook with a powerhouse version of his trademark "Happy." The side finishes with the disco flavored "Hot Stuff" and "Star F---" (the record company still insists on censoring the title). The Stones' tribute to Chuck Berry and the mythological groupie he created in "Sweet Little 16."

Side Two is where The Stones present their '70s rock philosophy. The side opens with "Tumbling Dice," the story of this decade's rebel without a cause. "Fingerprint File" follows, a perfect anthem for '70s paranoia and the CIA blues. Despite the lousy shape of things, The Stones proclaim "You Gotta Move," and this rendition of their own blues composition makes you want to do it. One disappointment of this album is that The Stones still haven't given us a legitimate live version of "Gimme Shelter." Still, this isn't the '60s, and that song no longer fits. Instead, Jagger offers us his resolution for lack of "satisfaction" — a seven-minute version of "You Can't Always Get What You Want."

Side Three is the core of Live showing The Stones at their most basic roots. This is the Toronto side recorded at the El Mocambo club before several hundred people. The set is as informal as the other sides are professional, and it presents The Stones doing four non-originals by the masters who influenced them. The side ends appropriately with Chuck Berry's "Around And Around" on which Keith emulates his idol. The side also features Jagger mumbling, "Hi, Margaret. How're ya, luv?" Side Four returns to Paris where the crowd is now in the state of mass hysteria. "It's Only Rock 'N Roll," The Stones explain, and they follow with "Brown Sugar," one of the greatest rock songs of all time, which demonstrated that only is enough. The side and album concludes with Jagger's ode to his most famous personas — "Jumping Jack Flash" and "Sympathy For The Devil." Whereas the latter song was previously always dark and foreboding with Jagger assuming the Lucifer role, it is now simply rock 'n roll with the aforementioned FUN element in mind. It's important to mention that every track on Live fares much better than the original studio versions. In addition, the recording quality is the best to be found on any live recording to date. The remaining pros are offering us a greeting: The Rolling Stones Love You. Hell, anyone who believes in rock 'n roll has known that for years. Still, I'm not sure that love is a strong enough word. To paraphrase Woody Allen in Annie Hall, it's only rock 'n roll and I loarve it. Play it LOUD!

Milliken claim not denied

In the rebuttal, Gov. Milliken insists that he has no authority to fire state agricultural commissioners for their early refusal to lower legal PBB tolerance levels in cattle. Fielding said he consulted lawyers who told him the governor has the authority to fire the commissioners.

In the rebuttal film, Public Health Director Maurice Reizen insists that a study his department did on 800 people to study PBB effects was not a "token study." Fielding said scientists conducting the study used a control group which already had high levels of PBB in their bodies thus distorting the results. The study found no effects in the group attributable to PBB.

Fielding also noted that Farm Bureau refused to allow a spokesperson to appear on his program because of their involvement in the state's first PBB trial in Cadillac. "Farm Bureau refused point blank to be on my program, but they appeared on the rebuttal program," he said.
