TWO EGYPTIAN MINISTERS RESIGN

Sadat plans visit to Israel

By Associated Press
President Anwar Sadat has set his historic visit to Israel for this weekend. The 36-hour visit would begin on Thursday by the resignation in succession of two Egyptian foreign ministers.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin said the 36-hour visit would begin on Thursday night, after the Jewish Sabbath. Sadat is to worship at a Moslem shrine in Jerusalem and meet privately with Begin and address the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, at 4 p.m. (9 a.m. EST).

Sadat has pledged not to negotiate a peace, and in his address to the Knesset he is expected to list the standard demands for a Palestinian homeland and Israeli withdrawal from lands occupied since 1967 — demands Israel rejects.

The visit comes about, Sadat will be the first Arab leader ever to visit the state, a breakthrough that could open a new chapter in the search for a permanent East-West peace after four wars.

Begin said the boldness of the visit, which Sadat described as a "sacred mission," reflected how badly he wanted peace and would shift his attention to Egypt's economic problems.

In Jerusalem, the visit falls just short of ending their 30-year quest for Arab peace.

The psychological impact of this on the world... said an Israeli Foreign Ministry official, pausing to search for words. "The psychological impact will be enormous," he said.

Announcement of Sadat's visit followed several days of public exchanges between Egyptian and Israeli leaders. But the news came as a surprise to U.S. and other officials who had not expected it until next week.

Sadat said the day was set last Wednesday and the final agreement came in an exchange of letters through the U.S. State Department to Egypt and Israel. The announcement in Jerusalem came amid these fast-paced developments:

Sadat accepted the invitation after flying to Damascus in a futile bid to win Syrian President Hafez Assad's support for the trip. After seven hours of talks, Assad said his failure to dissuade Sadat was "really painful."
Shortly after the Syrian and Egyptian leaders announced their disagreement, two bombs exploded outside the Egyptian embassy in Damascus. There was no immediate report on casualties, and the Syrian government quickly condemned the bombing.

As soon as Sadat returned to Egypt, the official Middle East News Agency announced that Ismail Fahmy, his foreign minister and top foreign policy aide since the October 1973 war, had resigned. Sadat named Fahmy's deputy, Mohammed Riad, in his stead, but several hours later the agency said he, too, had quit.
There was immediate speculation that both resigned in protest against the Israel visit. The agency said Sadat accepted both resignations and named Butros Ghali, a minister of state and member of the minority Coptic Christian faith, as acting foreign minister.

In Beirut, Palestinian leader Yasir Arafat condemned the planned visit and urged Sadat to cancel it. A communique from Arafat's Al Fatah guerrilla organization said the visit "represents a dangerous turning point and a gain for intrigues of international Zionism and the United States."
Begin told reporters in Jerusalem that after Sadat's visit to Jerusalem he hoped to be invited to Cairo. "I think that we shall now start a dialogue," he said. "I think there will be a followup."
He added: "It is a very good start... I hope that with this, serious negotiations will start for peace in the Middle East."
Begin denied that his aim was to drive a wedge between Egypt and other Arab states by receiving Sadat. "It never occurred to us," he said. "We want peace on all fronts."
Israeli police said they were preparing the biggest security operation in Israeli history. They were expected to ask the U.S. State Department to lend them an armored-limousine for Sadat.
About 200 Palestinian youths in the occupied West Bank town of Nablus demonstrated against the Sadat visit, chanting "Sadat-traitor."
Begin said Sadat would spend his two nights here at the King David Hotel. He said he and President Ephraim Katzir will meet Sadat with a red-carpet welcome at Ben-Gurion Airport on Saturday night.

Committee OKs study on PBB

LANSING (UPI) — The Senate Appropriations Committee, under pressure from House leaders and Gov. William G. Milliken, Thursday approved a $2 million study of the effects of PBB contamination on Michigan's general population.

The committee, torn between officials who called for immediate action on the House-passed bill and Senate members who said they wanted to take a closer look, spent three days discussing the measure.

But it was not taken up by the full Senate following approval. Final action now must await the return of the legislature from a 12-day Thanksgiving recess.

As designed by the Department of Public Health, the general population study would be a joint effort involving the department, the University of Michigan, the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta and the environmental medicine team headed by Dr. Irving J. Selikoff of Mount Sinai Hospital in New York.

U-M officials would design a random population sample involving some 6,000 Michigan residents and would interview them to provide baseline health data.

The Selikoff team, which already has studied the health effect of PBB on farm families and persons who bought products directly from contaminated farms, would do clinical testing.

State health officials said they needed immediate approval from the legislature to begin preliminary work and get federal approval for the design of the study and possible federal funding.

Legal services program in limbo over attorney

By MICHAEL WINTER
State News Staff Writer

Political haggling and conflicting statements have thrown the new ASMSU Legal Services program into limbo one month after it was approved by the student board.

During fall registration some 35,000 students were assessed an extra 50-cent ASMSU tax to pay for a comprehensive Legal Services program, according to ASMSU Comptroller Rick Lehrter. But the program will not get off the ground until at least January, because the attorney selection has not yet been completed.

An ad hoc committee was drawn up this summer to interview and select a candidate for the position of senior attorney for the legal services program. The committee, composed of ASMSU President Kent Barry, MSU attorney Leland Carr, former Ingham County Bar Association President James Timmer, Legal Services Director Jim McAdam and Lehrter, met two weeks ago.

After interviewing five candidates, the committee recommended Kenneth I. Smith for the position. Smith is now ASMSU attorney for students.

In his current role, Smith is available once a week to offer legal advice to students in 307 Student Services Bldg.

The $17,635 collected during fall term registration is now being used to pay Smith for the legal services he performs. Prior to fall term, Smith charged students $3.50 for 15 minutes of consultation. Since Oct. 1, $840 of the tax money has been used to pay for the present free legal advice in absence of the new program.

There is some confusion on the part of the ASMSU Student Board members over attorney selection. The ad hoc screening committee recommended Smith by a 4-1 vote two weeks ago for the senior legal services lawyer position. McAdam was the dissenting vote.

But the board decided last week to send Smith's name to the Space and Personnel Committee for further consideration. Some board members said they were uncertain of how the selection process worked and had heard differing opinions about the possible selection of Smith.

The Space and Personnel Committee, now responsible for deciding whether Smith's name will come before the board for approval at the next meeting, waited on the decision last week in order to interview Smith.

Space and Personnel Committee Chairperson Sue Lalk said the group will conduct an open meeting at 8:30 p.m. Sunday in 328 Student Services Bldg. to interview Smith. At that time the committee will decide on whether or not to recommend him to the board.

If the committee turns down Smith, the ad hoc committee will have to give Space and Personnel a second recommendation. Dur-McAdam said students are not getting what they paid for.

"They paid for comprehensive legal services and they're getting an attorney coming in one day a week and giving them legal advice for 15 minutes. They're only going to get it (comprehensive legal services) when they get two full-time attorneys five days a week," he said.

"If there are students out there who believe they paid 50 cents for comprehensive legal services and think they're getting it now, they are getting screwed."

Energy offer defeated by compromise

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House and Senate negotiators reached tentative agreement Thursday on a compromise killing administration proposals for mandatory electric pricing standards, but requiring the states to consider within two years a set of federal rate-making guidelines.

The proposed agreement, designed to break a deadlock that has halted progress on new energy legislation all week, also provided unprecedented opportunity for federal officials and consumers to appeal state electric rate decisions.

Members of the energy conference committee said they had resolved virtually all disputes except a decision whether to let the secretary of energy initiate appeals, as proposed by the House, or to adopt Senate language limiting him to joining appeals filed by other parties.

The conferees postponed a formal vote on the agreement pending resolution.

Rep. Harley Staggers, D-W.Va., energy conference committee chairperson told reporters after a meeting with his Senate colleagues that all the main differences appeared to have been resolved. The Senate has insisted on keeping the federal government out of electricity rate setting.

U.S. serves notice on Castro; Cuban forces increase in Africa

By BARRY SCHWEID
WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States served public notice Thursday that the presence of 27,000 Cubans in 16 countries "will have an impact on the pace and even the possibility of normalizing relations."

Confirming reports of an intelligence study, the State Department said that rather than fulfill a promise last spring to reduce the military level in Angola, Cuba has increased its forces there by about 20 percent. The Marxist government of Angola is fighting to suppress insurgents who keep a civil war flaring.

The study also lists 23,000 Cubans in the former Portuguese colony — all of them military personnel — the department said there were 750 Cubans in Mozambique, 400 to 800 in the Congo, 850 in Tanzania and about 400 in Ethiopia, where a Marxist government is fighting insurgents and invaders from Somalia on the front.

The intelligence study did not quarrel with efforts to improve U.S.-Cuban relations, but it suggested that the pace be slowed. The United States and Cuba, culminating a gradual decrease in relations between the two countries, opened "interest sections" in Washington and Havana on Sept. 1. The diplomats assigned to the two capitals perform the customary embassy functions.

Hodding Carter, spokesperson for the Carter administration, said "the presence of large numbers of Cubans in Africa is bound to have an unsettling effect" on U.S.-Cuban relations.

But he confirmed that the U.S. view did not call into question the steps already taken to repair the broken ties.

"We feel that having an 'interest section' gives us a place in which these concerns can be raised with the Cubans," he said.

The breakdown of estimated Cuban personnel in Africa is: Angola, 23,000 with 19,000 military, Ethiopia, 400 military and 350 medical, Uganda, possibly 25 military not confirmed, Tanzania, 350 to 500, mostly technical, Somalia, under expulsion order of the government and leaving, Mozambique, 850 to 750 Cubans, of these 150 civilian technicians, Madagascar, about 30 military advisers, Libya, 100 to 125, all military, Guinea, about 300 to 500, the majority military, Guinea Bissau, 100 to 200, about two-thirds military, Equatorial Guinea, 300 to 400, about half military, Congo, 400 to 500, about 300 of them military, Cape Verde, 10 to 15 medical personnel, Benin, 10 to 20 security advisers, Algeria, 35 medical personnel.

Vote brings home rule closer

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister James Callaghan's Labor government won an unexpectedly high 26-vote majority Wednesday night in the House of Commons for a motion to speed passage of its bill to give Scotland limited home rule.

The vote was the last major hurdle for the government in its controversial bid to provide an elected assembly for Scotland, ending 270 years of rule from London.

Political commentators said the bill will now reach the Statute Book by next summer and be ready for a referendum of Scotland's 5.2 million people by next fall.

A threatened revolt by English Laborite legislators opposed to the Scottish Devolution Bill collapsed under pressure from party floor managers, and the government won by a vote of 313-287.

Only nine diehard Laborite rebels voted against the "guillotine" motion, which limits debate on the Scottish bill to 17 days. Eight abstained.

Airline threatens holiday strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — A flight attendants union said Thursday it is preparing to strike United Airlines at midnight today in a dispute that could ground the nation's biggest airline over the busy Thanksgiving holiday.

Patricia D. Robertson, president of the Association of Flight Attendants, said there "has not been enough progress in talks at this point" between the union and the company to avert a walkout.

Despite the union's statement, federal mediators said contract talks were continuing. "We are still optimistic that an agreement can be reached before the deadline," said mediator Robert Harris.

United operates an average of 1,450 flights daily, carrying an average of 93,000 passengers a day to 94 cities in the United States and Canada.

Pay is not an issue in the dispute, which has lingered since September when the flight attendants rejected a tentative contract settlement.

Union spokespersons said the earlier proposal was rejected because employees wanted to change provisions on 24-hour standby, crew size, and the effective date and duration of the contract.

Defense rests case in bomb trial

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — The defense rested its case Thursday after calling to the stand the sister of Robert Chambliss, a 73-year-old former Ku Klux Klansman accused of setting off an explosion that killed four black girls in a Birmingham church in 1963.

The defendant's sister, Bennie Brown, testified she saw her brother at his home about noon on the day of the bombing. The blast occurred about 10:20 a.m., on Sunday, Sept. 15, 1963.

The trial, which began last Monday, will go to the jury after final arguments.

Bombing of the 16th Street Baptist Church occurred at the height of the civil rights struggle in the South. The blast ripped out a stone and brick wall of the church, killing one 11-year-old girl and three 14-year-old girls.

Crimes against business up

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Crimes against American business — ranging from simple theft to sophisticated computer abuse — cost an estimated $30 billion last year and the No. 1 reason is dishonest employees, a government study said Thursday.

"Thefts committed by employees are behind at least 60 percent of crime-related losses," a Commerce Department report estimated. "So many employees are stealing so much that employee theft is the most critical crime problem facing business today."

In the sector of the report on bank crime, some elaborate — and not so elaborate — schemes were also reviewed.

According to the report, crime within service industries alone cost $9.2 billion in 1976, and that is just the "tip of the iceberg." Much of the criminal activity goes unreported and some crimes — such as bribery, kickbacks and fraud — are impossible to calculate in dollar terms.

Millionaire acquitted in murder trial

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Fort Worth millionaire businessman Thomas Cullen Davis was found innocent Thursday in the shooting death of his 12-year-old stepdaughter.

The jury deliberated just over four hours before reaching its verdict. They also could have found Davis, 44, guilty of capital murder or a lesser offense of murder.

Davis was charged with murdering his stepdaughter, Andrea Wilborn, on the night of Aug. 2, 1976, at his $6 million residence.

At the time it was the home of his estranged wife, Priscilla, 36, and the prosecution tried to prove he invaded the house and started shooting in order to get at her.

FTC proposes insulation rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission on Thursday proposed a regulation designed to help consumers know better what they are getting when they buy home insulation materials.

The rule is intended to insure that purchasers of home insulation are given information necessary to determine the amount needed and to compare the various types of materials in a meaningful way, the FTC said.

The proposed rule would require all package labels and many advertisements for home insulation to disclose its "R value." This is a measure of insulation's comparative ability to reduce energy use by resisting the flow of heat through the exterior surfaces of a house. Generally, the higher the R value, the more effective the insulation.

However, the FTC and the Consumer Product Safety Commission cautioned that there are generally accepted maximum R values for the most commonly used insulating materials and any claim of R value above the maximum design standard should be highly suspect.

Under the proposed FTC rule, it would be unlawful to publish an R value that is false or not based on an approved standard test.

U.S. experts on Iran disagree over Shah's domestic policies

By ROBERT B. CULLEN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Two American experts on Iran say the truth about the Shah of Iran's domestic policies falls somewhere between the murderous tyranny described by his detractors and the unqualified praise of his supporters.

They agree the shah has eliminated some of the most repressive aspects of his regime, such as torture. But rights in his country still would seem limited to Americans, they added, and one expressed skepticism about the shah's sincerity.

William Butler of the International Commission of Jurists says he is "cautiously optimistic" that recent reforms the shah has allowed will be followed by more liberalization.

But Richard W. Cottam of the University of Pittsburgh thinks they are mostly cosmetic. Because of its dependence on American arms, Cottam said, the Iranian government "is willing to be accommodating to President Carter's 'eccentricity' on human rights."

"I believe it is viewed exactly on that level — an eccentricity," Cottam added.

Butler and Cottam gave their assessments at a recent hearing held by the House subcommittee on international organizations. Butler, a New York attorney long affiliated with human rights organizations, praised the shah for inviting Amnesty International, the International Red Cross and his own organization to inspect Iran's jails and interrogation centers.

He said that prior to this year, the shah's secret police had an unrestricted right to arrest political dissidents and detain them indefinitely without due process.

They could be tried secretly without the right to hire their own counsel, and they could be summarily executed, without appeal. Iranian foes of the shah say thousands of people were killed in this way.

Butler said the shah has agreed to end the torture of prisoners.

"We have been very carefully monitoring this situation, and we are not aware of any case of torture within the last 10 to 11 months," he said. "Whether or not that will continue, we do not know."

Butler said he has been encouraged by the reforms proposed by the shah this and enacted by the Iranian legislature in August.

The reforms include allowing a defendant to choose his lawyer and have an open trial in cases deemed by government to involve national security issues.

But Cottam maintained the shah's police still "actively arrest" dissidents, discouraging others. The shah recently broke up a demonstration advocating the return of Iran to a political foe of the shah who is in exile in neighboring Iraq, Cottam said.

He said that his analysis of recent dissident manifestos recently convinced him that the shah still allows less freedom of expression than the United States.

Cottam added that the repression in Iran might be more dangerous than helping the shah's foes, luring them into the open where they are easily identified.

Scientists refute report on power plant safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of scientists opposing nuclear power plants said Thursday the government's basic safety estimates are far too optimistic and that reactor accidents may kill some 14,000 people by the year 2000.

The Union of Concerned Scientists, a group frequently involved in challenges of Nuclear Regulatory Commission policy, issued a detailed criticism of the NRC's 1974 "Rasmussen Report," the government's chief safety assessment.

The Rasmussen report had concluded that the chances of a serious nuclear power plant accident are almost insignificant — smaller than the chance of a person's being killed by a falling meteorite.

But the Union of Concerned Scientists charged that this much-debated analysis contains serious mistakes that underestimate the danger to the public.

The group said "correction" of the Rasmussen study shows the odds of a nuclear reactor melting and releasing radioactive substances may be 20 times greater than the NRC estimated.

The early injuries and fatalities from such an accident may be 10 times greater than previously estimated and, where prevailing winds might carry radioactivity into heavily populated areas, the casualties could be up to 1,000 times higher than the Rasmussen estimates, the group said.

In a large nuclear program, there may be one chance in 100 of a nuclear power plant accident that would kill up to 100,000 people, the union study said, and under the worst circumstances, up to 300,000 could die.

The union said it believes that the hazards, as it estimates them, "will prove unacceptable to the public."

"A single large, but by no means the largest, nuclear accident may well occur within a few decades," the union study said. "Should this occur we judge that the public response would be very great and could well threaten the continued operation of domestic nuclear plants."

The group said the United States should not commit itself heavily to nuclear power until it has more reliable assurances of safety.

The group recommended that the NRC withdraw the Rasmussen study and do its safety analysis over again.

Federal court jury declares mistrial in publishing debate

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — A mistrial was declared Thursday in the obscenity trial of Al Goldstein, publisher of "Smut" and "Screw" magazines, when a federal court jury said it was unable to agree on a verdict.

The jury of seven women and five men had deliberated nearly 14 hours over three days before deciding it could not reach an agreement in the case involving the New York publisher, a former partner and their publishing company.

Alvin Goldstein, 41, and former partner James L. Buckley, 33, of Stockbridge, Mass., had been charged with illegally mailing into Kansas 11 copies of the allegedly obscene tabloids and conspiring to mail obscene materials into the state.

Also named in the charges was their publishing house, Milky Way Productions Inc., which is based in New York.

After the mistrial was declared, two jurors said the jury was deadlocked 9-3 for acquittal. Prosecutors said they would not decide for two or three weeks whether to seek another trial.

The charges were filed after Kansas post office officials subscribed to "Screw" and "Smut" magazines, noted the arrival of incoming copies, then mailed the tabloids back to the publisher.

Goldstein's lawyer, Herald Price Fahringer, had requested a mistrial Wednesday, expressing fear that some member of the jury might surrender his position in the case "for lack of stamina."

U.S. District Judge Frank G. Thies denied Fahringer's motion, saying "I don't think they've gone near long enough."

Jurors asked no questions of the judge Thursday. On Wednesday they had asked for a dictionary, but Thies denied the request.

Fahringer said before the resumption of deliberations Thursday, "We are very encouraged. Anytime you have a jury debating for two days, you have to be encouraged. It is the quick verdicts which are bad verdicts."

LATEST MEDICAL SPECIALTY

'U' sportsmedicine grows

Sportsmedicine — the treatment of athletic injuries — is the latest medical specialty. It has grown by leaps and bounds, across the nation in recent years.

At MSU, athletes on intercollegiate teams were traditionally treated by one physician in the Olin Health Center who devoted a large portion of his time to sportsmedicine.

For years, the late Dr. James S. Feurig, health center director, filled that position. After his death in 1975, Dr. Lawrence Jarrett took the job.

Today, there is an athletic medicine clinic operating out of the second floor of Olin Health Center on a shoestring budget, with a team of four physicians supplied by MSU's colleges of human and osteopathic medicine.

Headed by Dr. Herbert Ross, an osteopathic orthopedist, the athletic medicine clinic treats between 85 and 100 patients weekly, even though specialty care is only offered in the afternoons.

Services at the clinic are open to all MSU students participating in athletics, a number estimated at 20,000 by Ross.

The four physicians are paid for through their faculty appointments in the medical schools. Because service is provided to members of University sports teams, funds for supplies are provided by the intercollegiate athletic fund.

"It's a good program, and it's gonna grow into something," said Jarrett, who worked with Lansing high school athletes for 20 years.

"I take all the calls in the morning — evaluate them and see they get to the right people," he explained.

Ross is satisfied with the program, but would like to see it moved to the Clinical Center building on service road in south campus.

He noted there is sufficient space in the clinic center, in the form of unused modules, to house the athletic medicine clinic.

"Our time is divided between Olin and the Clinical Center," Ross said, and it would avoid duplication of medical records and increase the quality and extensiveness of patient care.

Presently, two primary care physicians, Drs. David Hough and Douglas B. McKeag provide basic medical care to intercollegiate athletes. Ross and Dr. John Downs, another specialist, provides orthopedic service to all athletes.

Although Ross is happy with the program, there are indications he would be happier with a move to the Clinical Center and a bigger budget.

"We could see more people if we consolidated our efforts," he said.

Soviet youth multilingual

Iren Raisler

By TERRY PRZYBYLSKI
State News Staff Writer

As the strains of folk music from a nearby Russian Club party floated into the office on the seventh floor of Wells Hall, Iren Raisler leaned back in her chair, lit up a cigarette and smiled.

"There are so few Americans willing to learn foreign languages today," she said. "I sometimes think the whole English-speakers' theory was expressed by the Englishwoman who said, 'I do not see why English, properly spoken and enunciated, should not be understood by everyone.'"

As an assistant professor of Russian at MSU, Raisler is hopeful that this traditional "chauvinistic" attitude toward foreign languages in the United States will change in the future.

Raisler said the traditional American refusal to learn foreign languages does not just keep enrollments in foreign language courses low. It also frustrates attempts to improve relations between America and other countries, where, according to Raisler, foreign language study is much more common.

"In the Soviet Union and Europe," she explained, "it is not unusual for children to learn three or four languages. It's like a status symbol for them."

Because Russian youngsters learn English, Raisler continued, they have a better understanding of Americans than Americans do of Russians, though they will probably never personally meet an American.

"They will never get the chance to use English here, and yet they all learn it, so not only do they understand our language, they also understand our psychology."

Raisler added that if American youths learned Russian as well as Soviet children learned English, it would make for greater understanding between the two countries.

"Nobody is crazy enough to want a war in this day and age," she said, "but if we want to avoid one we need to understand each other better."

Raisler said it is particularly important that more young Americans learn Russian in the near future in order to maintain satisfactory diplomatic ties with the Soviet Union.

"Most of our current diplomatic corps is due to retire in the 1980's," she noted. "There is a crucial shortage of young people fluent in Russian and other Eastern European languages to replace them."

Not only future diplomats, but also aspiring businessmen will need to know how to speak Russian in the future, because of the expanding trade between America and the Soviets, Raisler added.

"Business would profit so much from Russian," she said. "The Soviet traders can take advantage of us now because they speak our language and we don't speak theirs."

"Just look at the Russian wheat deal a few years ago!" she added. "What more proof do you need? The translators there were Soviets, not Americans. We lost money because we couldn't negotiate properly with them."

Raisler stressed that to get a job which would involve the use of Russian, it is not necessary to major in the language. However, an applicant should have a solid background in Russian in addition to the appropriate political science or business major.

Though the enrollment in MSU's Russian classes is currently small — only about 150, according to Raisler — she encourages more students to sign up for Russian courses.

Raisler also said that although other Slavic languages, such as Polish, Czech and Ukrainian, are not currently offered, the department is able to offer instruction in those languages and would do so "if there is sufficient demand for them."

Advisory seeks petitions

The Non-Academic Women's Advisory Committee is seeking petitions to fill vacancies representing four categories of MSU employees.

The four categories needing representation in January are clerical — technical, supervisory, labor and student.

Committee member Mary Cullen said student employees are encouraged to petition.

"We'd like more input into student personnel but find it hard to get working students to make a commitment to be on the committee," she said.

The committee was formed in January of 1975 and reports directly to Jack Breslin, executive vice-president, and Roger Wilkenon, vice-president for business and finances on matters pertaining to all non-academic employees on campus, she said.

Anyone interested in serving on the committee can obtain petitions and more information from the Office of Women's Programs, 380 Administration Building. The deadline for returning petitions is November 21.

protein diets under scrutiny for deaths

By DANIEL HERMAN
State News Staff Writer

Liquid protein diets have come under increased scrutiny with the announcement last week by the Food and Drug Administration that, "the liquid protein diet is a contributing factor or a cause," in the deaths of 10 women.

Commissioner Donald Kennedy said that containers of liquid protein to carry a label which states, "do not use for weight reduction or maintenance without medical supervision. Do not use without medical advice if you are taking prescription medications. Not for use by infants, lactating or nursing women." He added however that this stress occurs with all starvation diets.

One problem is that, "liquid protein diets are becoming a real fad," commented Nancy Glick, a spokesperson for the FDA.

"We also don't believe a liquid protein diet is effective for those who want to just lose less than 20 pounds quickly, because the diet will not change eating habits, and the weight will be gained back," Glick said.

"The best advice I can give, is that of all diets we have seen," said Carol Callaghan a Nutrition cancer-cures criticized, diets called 'quackery remedies'

By PETE BRONSON
State News Staff Writer

What do Humphrey Bogart, Babe Ruth, T.S. Eliot, Chet Huntley, Charles Lindbergh and Walt Disney have in common? They were all victims of America's second-leading cause of death — cancer.

American Cancer Society estimates predict that 27,000 new cancer cases will be diagnosed in Michigan this year.

However, "quackery" remedies like laetrile and complex almond diets will not help cancer sufferers, according to Melvin L. Reed, of Wayne State University's department of oncology.

Speaking at the cancer society's Tenth Annual Cancer Conference for Nurses at Kellogg Center Thursday, Reed mocked promotional evidence of cancer-curing nutritional plans like William Donald Kelly's "Almond Diet". He was critical of proponents of laetrile, a formula derived from apricot and other fruit pits known chemically as amygdalin, he called them "dupes," "profiters", and "quacks."

Reed acted out the "exaggerated claims" of laetrile users who claim to be healed and presented what he said is the truth, about the controversial drug.

"Contreras (a Mexican physician who provides laetrile treatment to cancer patients) says 54 percent of his patients were benefited by laetrile treatment," Reed said. "But what is benefit?" he continued.

"If I feel better today than I felt yesterday, I must have benefited from what I did yesterday. If I've just flown from cruddy Detroit to sunny Tijuana, what do you think I will say when doctors ask me if I feel better than when I left home?"

Reed pointed out that many of the cases in which laetrile was credited with curing cancer, the patient was also receiving other types of cancer therapy.

"If you are going to test something you have to use it alone, not with something else which is curative," he said.

So far laetrile has "flunked" all of the tests put to it by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), but people still seek treatment by the drug because any hope is appealing to cancer victims, Reed said.

"Cancer patients are almost defenseless when promised a safe, easy cure. They are susceptible to claims of laetrile promoters because they are looking for a way out. They don't want to die, and they're afraid," he said.

"The theories of how laetrile chemically attacks cancer cells have been proven false, but the drug's backers have gotten in too far over their heads to back down now from their untenable position," he added.

"It's easy to ignore things contrary to what you believe."

Reed was equally critical of the almond diet cancer cure promoted by Kelly.

Reading from comments by the diet's originator, in a national health magazine, Reed mocked Kelly's claims that he can nutritionally cure cancer.

The diet, which includes at least ten nals — belching, passing gas, eye trouble, fatigue and hernia — Reed commented, "people actually believe this stuff."

The major characteristics of quackery, aside from being profit motivated, are fairly consistent, he said.

"Most quackery is based on few experialmonds at every meal, a pint of carrot juice per day and eating at least 70 percent of food raw, is a typical example of quackery, Reed told his audience.

Because many people are bewildered by science, they believe anything which sounds remotely scientific if expressed in terms they can understand, Reed explained.

As he read Kelly's cancer-warning sig-ments but sounds Pseudo-scientific. It usually revolves around a novel or simple idea so people say "Thank God we discovered it," he said.

"It is often opposed to the establishment and appeals to people as an underdog. Also, the theory is simple enough to understand for advocates to explain it to others."

Advisory group listens to concerns of women

The Women's Advisory Committee to the Provost will hold an open meeting Monday to listen to views on issues of importance to women faculty, specialists, graduate and undergraduate students.

The meeting will be held from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in 384 Union. Those who wish to address the committee on a particular topic should call Kathleen Wicks at 363-6387. Presentation time will be allotted to insure a wide coverage of topics, but spontaneous participation will also be encouraged.

The committee has dealt with issues such as part-time tenure, pay differentials, temporary appointments, increasing opportunities for women graduate students, maximizing appointment opportunities to major University committees and the status of women specialists.

It hopes to add to this list such issues as affirmative action, fringe benefit policies, pregnancy leave, sexism in the classroom and Women's Studies.

The University-sponsored committee is composed of faculty members, graduate students and undergraduates, and advises the provost on policy.

FOCUS ON FUTURE PROSPECT

Energy forum slated

Future energy alternatives is the theme of a seminar to be held Friday and Saturday in Kellogg Center.

Presented by the Michigan International Council, the seminar will focus on the prospects for a U.S. energy program, future energy sources, the future implications of certain energy choices and possible strategies for change that may be required.

The conference will open 8 p.m. Friday with a round table discussion of "Prospects for a U.S. Energy Program."

The seminar will continue 9 a.m. Saturday with an energy symposium. William Madar, a representative of Standard Oil of Ohio, will discuss "the Way it is with Fossil Fuels," and Consumers Power Company President John Selby will speak on "Going Nuclear — Pros and Cons."

Allen O'Shea, president of Environmental Energy Inc., will discuss "Potential for Solar, Wind and Water."

The afternoon session will begin with the keynote address by Walker Ciesler, former president and chairman of the board of Detroit Edison and founder of Overseas Advisory Associates Inc. His topic is "Energy and the Human Environment."

In a panel discussion to follow, Herman Koenig, MSU professor of electrical engineering and system science and director of the Center for Environmental Quality, will talk on "The Socio-Cultural Transition;" Robert Waldron, president of Associated Petroleum Industries of Michigan, will discuss "The Political Dimension;" Robert Edgerton, professor of engineering at Oakland University, will speak on "The Conservation Ethic," and Morris Levitt, executive director of Fusion Energy Foundation, will discuss "The Steady-State Society."

The seminar will conclude with a discussion of "Strategies for Change." The registration fee is $5.

pregnant or nursing women." Liquid protein, which is derived from egg products, is currently classified by the FDA as a "food product," and can be purchased over the counter in drug stores and supermarkets.

nutritionist with the Michigan Department of Public Health, "the liquid protein diet is without a doubt the most dangerous we have seen."

Harold Sours is currently investigating the deaths at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Georgia.

"We are not really sure exactly what caused the deaths, at present, we don't have a common denominator," he said. Sours explained that the ten women, all of whom were obese, died of cardiac arrhythmia, an irregular heartbeat.

"What we are currently trying to do is to determine what the expected death rate is among young obese women from this problem," Sours said.

"The similarity in the cause of death was myocardial infarction, which is an inflammation of the heart, caused by a viral infection or a bacterial infection," Sours said.

"What the FDA is trying to do is look at the product. What we are trying to determine is how it affected these women and how we are just still looking," he said.

Dr. John Isbister, of the Michigan Department of Public Health explained that many of the liquid protein diets offered for sale, nothing is consumed except liquid protein and a few vitamin supplements.

"Suddenly your body's metabolic system shifts from a normal diet to only hydrolyzed protein. The body is forced to burn from its reserves, and you get a weight loss," Isbister said.

Begin-Sadat summit: new chance for peace

A major turning point in the long and tortured history of the Mideast may now be at hand.

The invitation extended by Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat to visit Israel is both unprecedented and fraught with uncertainties. If — as appears likely — the summit becomes a reality, tensions in the Mideast tinderbox might be eased considerably, and a lasting peace settlement might at last be achieved.

If, on the other hand, the summit is grounded by political crossfire, or if nothing of substance is accomplished in the meeting between Begin and Sadat, the possibility of yet another Mideast war will increase dramatically.

The various imponderables that might complicate the Begin-Sadat summit are already manifesting themselves in disturbing ways. On Wednesday, Sadat visited Syria for a chilly meeting with Syrian President Hafez Assad, who opposes the projected summit. Assad and other Arab leaders are concerned that Sadat may bargain with Israel for a separate peace.

Assad and his allies want to present a united front in dealing with Israel. Inasmuch as Sadat's mission to Israel would be the first time an Arab leader has ever visited Israel — and because it is obvious that Egypt is desperate for peace — Assad's worries are understandable.

But these fears should not dissuade Sadat from meeting face to face with Begin. The situation in the Mideast has become increasingly unstable and polarized. In the past, it appeared that political differences between the Arabs and Israel were on the verge of being resolved. With the accession of Begin to Israel's top post, the rift between Israel and its Arab neighbors has widened considerably.

Begin is a hard-liner, and rejects out of hand Arab demands that Israel withdraw from territories occupied during the 1967 war. While Begin might be justified in some of his views, his leadership has produced disturbing trends.

Begin's policy of establishing permanent Israeli settlements in occupied territories is a dangerous and unjustified one. In order to achieve a permanent peace with its Arab neighbors, Israel must eventually face the fact that it will have to give up some, if not all, the occupied land. Begin apparently has closed his mind to this reality.

Begin's obdurate attitude displays itself in other ways. His violent retaliation against Lebanon for raids staged by the Palestine Liberation Organization against Israel — a retaliation that claimed the lives of far more innocent civilians than it did militant Palestinians — was an outrage. President Carter, whose loose rhetoric on the subject of Mideast peace negotiations has gotten him in hot water with Israel's supporters, had to be restrained from condemning Begin outright.

All in all, the situation in the Mideast is still uncertain and perilously close to a resumption of armed conflict. The Arabs know that Israel is in a position of military superiority. That is why Sadat and other moderate leaders appreciate the importance of reaching an accommodation with Begin's regime, and why the Sadat-Begin summit should proceed.

ASMSU board move violates ethics

In yet another unprecedented move, the ASMSU Student Board Tuesday appointed the Panhellenic Council representative the new College of Communication Arts and Sciences representative.

All student representatives are elected by a campus constituency, be it the undergraduates of a particular college, like Communication Arts and Sciences, or be it the members of a campus organization like Panhellenic.

Once elected to the ASMSU Student Board it seems only sensible and fair that the person represent those constituents who voted him or her onto the board.

So it appears the ASMSU Student Board has sidestepped logistics and sideswiped fairness in switching Lisa Cornelius from her current position as Panhellenic representative to Communication Arts and Sciences representative, without consulting student leaders of the college.

But the ASMSU Code of Operations provides for such a move, however unfair or insensible it may be. For if this step was a part of legal procedure, what is to stop the present or future ASMSU president from padding the board with sympathetic followers?

Cornelius was elected by the members of Panhellenic to represent and serve them. The ASMSU Student Board shouldn't have the right or authority to remove her from one elected position to another, whether she consents or not. Only those persons who make up the College of Communication Arts and Sciences should have the right to elect their representative.

Cornelius is taking the seat vacated earlier this term by Jean Riker, while the Panhellenic Council seat will probably be filled by Panhellenic's vice president. At the end of winter term an election will be held for all college representative seats.

But the fact that this appointment is only temporary should not cloud the central issue: the ASMSU Student Board should not have the right to "appoint" a "representative." The words conflict and so does the concept.

Wasting trees

I have been working at MSU since March 21, 1977. The first time I saw the State News I thought it was the best thing to happen to me. Now I could catch up on the news without thinking I'm being left out of the world, I thought.

Lately, I've heard all the news I'd like to hear on the radio. (And all the news is the same — no matter where it's coming from.)

Now, some people may like the paper. I personally think it is a waste. All I get out of the paper lately is the comics; (and those aren't as good as they should/could be), and then I simply throw it out.

In short, we shouldn't be wasting valuable trees and time just to have a worthless thing like the State News printed.

Crass campaign

The crass campaign conducted by ASMSU to promote its "Computer Match" reached a tasteless nadir with the flyers that were distributed throughout the residence halls. With such pictures as publicity, how can anyone fail to believe that the computer dating service is anything but an excuse to match up willing partners for some cheap pyrotechnics in the boudoir? People intending to use the service as a legitimate means to meet new and interesting people cannot help but be disappointed and revolted by the sleazy slogans and crude snapshots.

One wonders, too, if the students who allowed themselves to be photographed are typical users of the service. If so, all self-respecting people should find other means than the dating service for making new friends. Who wants to be "matched" with those whose assessment of themselves shows such loathing and insecurity that they must exhibit their bodies to the general public to feel accepted and important?

VIEWPOINT: THE HUNTER CASE

Court tactics sound

By PETER HOUK

This letter is intended to clarify a number of misconceptions regarding the plea agreement reached in the case of People v. Michael Hunter, a matter detailed in the State News on Friday, October 21, 1977.

This office was criticized for allowing Mr. Hunter, who was charged with felonious assault (a charge carrying a 4-year maximum), to plead guilty to the reduced charge of attempted carrying a concealed weapon (two-year maximum).

I promised the citizens of Ingham County in 1976 that I would seek to end the practice of plea bargaining with persons charged with offenses such as murder, armed robbery, criminal sexual conduct (i.e., rape), house burglary, cases of serious assault involving great bodily harm, and career criminals.

Inasmuch as 1,200 felony warrants are issued by my office every year and the circuit court has time available to bring to trial only 70 of those cases, it is necessary to dispose of 1,130 felony cases without trial. Clearly, any attempt to fully utilize the court time available to us will require that cases be prioritized and that some lesser cases be plea bargained.

In Mr. Hunter's case he was charged with a bargainable offense, had no prior criminal history, and caused no serious physical injury to his victim. It was determined that the judge retained sufficient sentencing latitude with the two-year felony conviction and therefore conviction on the four-year offense would offer little additional actual punishment.

Perhaps most importantly, the disposition of the Hunter case allowed us to bring to trial a case involving a defendant with three prior felony convictions who was charged with two counts of first degree criminal sexual conduct (each carrying a maximum of life imprisonment) and one count of breaking and entering an occupied dwelling (15-year maximum).

In addition, since the Hunter case, we have successfully prosecuted a repeat offender charged with a variety of sexual acts with his children and a man with three prior sodomy convictions who forcibly raped a 12-year-old boy. I will offer no apology for the judgment of my staff in determining that our limited court time be used against these more heinous offenders.

The timing of the Hunter plea, in that all witnesses appeared unnecessarily on the day set for trial, was unfortunate. Under our policy Mr. Hunter's plea should have been agreed upon and taken by the Friday preceding trial in order to avoid the very inconvenience which occurred. However, the Hunter case was called for trial only that Friday before trial and the defense attorney and assistant prosecutor handling the case could not confer on the case because of court conflicts. Thus, the first opportunity to consummate the plea agreement was the day set for trial, or the following Monday.

If the criminal justice system had unlimited numbers of judges, prosecutors, defense attorneys and jurors available, this plea agreement would not have been necessary. However, in view of our finite resources, I am charged with maximizing the effectiveness of the criminal justice machinery by determining which defendants deserve the most serious attention. I believe that the citizens of Ingham County have been better served by removing a number of violent and dangerous sex offenders, with prior convictions, from their midst.

Life too short

I would like to reply to Denise DeCoster and Suzanne DeYoung in reference to their letter concerning the women who advertised their "waiting and willing bodies" for the ASMSU Computer Dating Service.

I'm speaking on behalf of Shaw Hall. I thought of that saying "between the sheets" and I still think it's clever. If you had taken the time to investigate further into the matter (which you really should have, since you were offended so badly, you would have found that behind the sheets, we were fully clothed. I suppose you don't wear tube tops, ever — do you? Unbutton the top button of your stiff white collars and have some fun. Life is just too short to take light matters so seriously. Save the criticism for more important issues.

Humor needed

Where has humor gone? How can anyone be so narrow-minded as to only see one biased meaning out of a totally innocent cartoon? I refer to Ms. Lyn Schumaker's letter last Tuesday criticizing Gordon Carleton's cartoon "MSU Shadows" of a few days earlier.

Her accusations of sexual overtones and racist drawings have to be coming from left field. She really missed her boat.

This cartoon depicted a very simple scene in which all of us have partaken in, or heard of, at one time or another. One that everyone remembers, I'm sure. A girl comes back to the dorm only to find her roommate has her boyfriend over. Her roommate hands her the phone so she can call her boyfriend (who just dropped her off a few minutes earlier) in hopes she'll go away for awhile. We all know why and it's actually funny.

But only an airhead would derive some superficial meaning out of that. What is so sexist about it? It's a common occurrence, on campus and off, with anyone who has a roommate. It could pertain to male roommates as well as females. There is nothing seriously wrong with it. I found it worth a good chuckle, in fact.

And then you imply he (Gordon Carleton) draws and writes in hopes of inducing the MSU female population to put out, or shades of that meaning.

The MSU females are not cliché, they are independent and intelligent. But I'm not fighting against it. I am just simply trying to expose a very destructive opinion.

Humor is a very sacred and precious thing (deary), and if you can't find it in comics, you may as well hang it up. All you read comics for is to find something else the majority of us don't really care to hear about. I find some very good humor in "MSU Shadows" and "Beetle Bailey" (another one of your so-called "sexist and racist" cartoons) and I'm sure many others do too. Humor is there to put a grin or smile on your face — maybe even a chuckle or laugh in your throat. It doesn't have to be so unrealistic. Why don't you take your S and

Religion is OK

I am lost in the lightmares!!!
Death. Age. Arthritis.
I stand on the corner of Grove and on Saturday night and watch a procession of blooming youths unburden urgent messages. To the street, to other. Stuningly alive.
But old age will come. Many are to die, and many more can't deal with prospect and so ignore it.
It is probably impossible to predict future with any great degree of accuracy except for one fact:
We will all die. We will find out like like to look up at our outstretched hands one last time, as we vainly grasp thin thread of life with a passion that defies all rational arguments.

RENALDO
MIGALDI

Grim? Depressing? Say what you but it is a FACT.

This is why I don't make fun of religion anymore. I used to.

I used to lump them all together and disdainful sneer. Tarot, Christianity, Zodiac, I Ching, mantra, Buddha.

Now I discriminate.

For instance, Christianity is cool by was raised a Catholic by loving Italian parents. No complaints. But has the Catholic Church done to Italy?

They've perverted it. I think would think it absurd how the Church have built an economic empire based teachings of humility and POVERTY.

I say go pick up a Bible some and read the Sermon on the Mount, and you'd never heard of Catholic Christianity before. Unless you're you probably will be charmed out shorts. So simple, beautiful and good.

I do not sneer or denigrate. For religious faith, like art, sex, performs an important function for millions of people who keeps them alive. It keeps them from committing suicide.

Or another example. I'm lately attracted by the tender philosophies of Lao-tzu (him up) and the Buddha. We are with each other and with the universe which we live (it is impossible to communicate this correctly in words).

I am not attracted to Islam or to Southern Baptism or Baha'i or Mormon. But neither do I laugh, sneer or denigrate.

For religious faith, like art, sex, performs an important function for millions of people: it keeps them alive. It keeps them from committing suicide.

Never mind what horrible things have done to each other in the name of faith. That is not religion's fault. Misguided fanatics like Anita B. Myung Sung Moon and Billy Graham (bless his bucks) were not busy performing religion for their own economic righteous ends, they'd be just as perverting something else.

If religious faith is sincere, honest, creative, generous, and is performed with a giving and loving heart, no one really suffer, and the believer is rewarded richly.

It's a very valid alternative.

ESTIMATED 5 MILLION QUIT FOR DAY

Break ends for U.S. smokers

By THE STATE NEWS and WIRE SERVICES

The smoking lamp went out. A 24-hour tobacco break, voluntary of course, ended Thursday for an estimated 5 million Americans.

That's the number of people the American Cancer Society predicted would put puffing aside for the annual coast-to-coast "Great American Smoke-Out."

Events of the day ranged from "the world's largest ash-tray" for depositing cigarettes — not butts — at San Francisco's Union Square to bonfires in Detroit.

The purpose of the campaign, supported by federal health agencies, was to focus national attention on the health hazards of tobacco and to encourage at least some of the nation's 54 million smokers to kick the habit.

At MSU, Al Ballard, secretary to the board of trustees, said he "demonstrated all his human frailties" by smoking in spite of the "Smoke-Out."

Ballard said, as he exhaled a stream of smoke, that he figured he could pay his taxes by smoking "heavily-taxed cigarettes" out of a "public-spirited motivation."

Board of Trustees Chairperson Patricia Carrigan, D-Farmington Hills, could not be reached for comment on her smoking habits. According to Ballard, Carrigan is the only trustee who smokes.

Members of the Michigan House of Representatives gave up their cigarettes and cigars for the day, but not without some grumbling.

Rep. William Bryant moved that all smoking in the chamber be halted on Thursday. As he spoke, Majority Leader Joe Forbes stood by, blowing smoke into Bryant's face. The resolution passed, but Rep.

Alfred Sheridan refused to put out his cigar until the house speaker ordered sergeants to "remove either the representative or the cigar."

The Detroit-area chapter distributed 45,000 pledge cards, and a spokesman said that a local restaurant had promised free drinks to anyone who stopped smoking. Tellers at the suburban Dearborn Bank and Trust Co. arrived for work wearing blue T-shirts with a bird's picture and the slogan "Smoking is for the birds."

Seattle gave the event an early kickoff when the cheerleaders for the Seattle Seahawks of the National Football League passed out matchbooks in the downtown area. The match heads were cut off and the cover read: "On Nov. 17 get off your butt." Inside it read: "Stop Smoking!"

Not to be outdone, Coach Bobby Leonard of the National Basketball Association's Indiana Pacers urged: "Don't puff it — stuff it," at a barrel for that purpose at Monument Circle in Indianapolis.

Dr. Justin Stein of Long Beach, Calif., president of the state Cancer Society, said the strength of the smoke-out was that people who smoke are leaders of the effort, including national Chairman Sammy Davis Jr., a chain smoker.

Dr. Terry Reynolds of San Bernardino, Calif., said 1 million smokers giving up cigarettes is equivalent to taking 17,000 cars off the road.

Researchers use trout for water experiments

For years, researchers have used the white rat for "above water" experiments. Now water researchers have found their own guinea pig — the rainbow trout.

The colorful trout, a prize to most fishermen, is now used as a specimen for water pollution research. Reasons for using trout are that they are readily available from fish hatcheries, can be maintained year round, grow quickly, are found throughout the western hemisphere and are hardy, said Paul Fromm, MSU professor of physiology. They are the best type of fish for research purposes, he said.

Fromm uses trout gill to study the biological effects of heavy metals, detergents, and other pollutants.

The gill has an important function to fish life, Fromm said. It not only serves to take in oxygen from the water but it also releases nitrogen, which is toxic to fish and maintains the water and mineral balance in the fish.

By studying the gill, he will be able to determine, if pollutants will have an effect on other water-organisms.

"If we burn more coal or strip mine more of it," Fromm explained, "acids and coal tars are going to get into our waterways. We had better know something about what these things are going to do to fish and other living things."

Fromm said the gill is an excellent model because it is fully exposed to the water and pollutants in it, just as the human lung is exposed to pollutants in the air.

The trout used in these experiments come from a commercial fish hatchery near Harrison. Fromm uses only these fish because they have been raised under a controlled environment.

The fish are brought to MSU and stored in large green plastic tanks until they have adjusted to the move. Fromm and his students then remove a section of gill tissue from a fish and connect the gill to a pump that forces a salt solution through the gill. "We simulate the action of the trout's heart then immerse the gill in a radioactive bath," explained Fromm.

The measurement of active material movement in the water bath to the solution enables scientists to draw an accurate picture of gill functions.

Once a control is established, Fromm said he can compare with gills exposed to pollutants and study the changes.

Out labor organization withdrawal shortsighted,' professor says

By JEANNE BARON
State News Staff Writer

The United States withdrawal from the International Labor Organization is extremely shortsighted and makes Americans look like damn fools," said MSU professor who worked with the organization. Robert Repas, a professor in School of Labor and Industrial Relations, was involved with the ILO for four months in 1975 when he prepared a manual on the purpose of the organization. However, the manual was not published, "because the ILO thought it was too critical of the organization and the ILO thought it was not enough," Repas said. Repas explained that the ILO has three functions. First, the organization acts as a clearinghouse for social legislation and information, and second, it provides technical assistance by training instructors and sending experts to other countries.

"The third function, establishing international labor conventions (standards) for humane working conditions throughout the world, is unique," he said. "Another unique thing is that the ILO is the only international agency with tripartite representatives. Each country has two government representatives and one management and labor representative." One of the reasons the United States withdrew from the ILO was because some government and labor officials felt the Soviet Union was using the organization for political purposes, he explained. All representatives from Russia are essentially government representatives, because the country's trade unions are operated by the government, he continued. Before the Russians and one-party African states joined the ILO, he said, only capitalist countries were members, so the idea of politicking did not come up. Repas criticized the United States withdrawal because of politicking in the ILO, adding that Americans have been just as guilty of using the organization for political purposes. For instance, the AFL-CIO tried to get a resolution passed saying Russia uses slave labor, he said. In addition, out of 143 conventions the ILO has adopted, the United States has only ratified seven. "I think the United States has deliberately failed to live up to its obligations," Repas said. "It's a classic case of the pot calling the kettle black." Repas added that the ILO probably has the best record of accomplishments of any international organization. Charges can be filed through the ILO, which can investigate and request changes in social legislation if it is warranted, he said. The organization cannot force compliance with conventions, but it can assist in getting countries to conform through public pressure. The American withdrawal will hurt the ILO, since 25 percent of the organization's budget is contributed by the United States. In addition, U.S. members were working on several important studies, including ones on industrial cancer, multinational trade unions and economic growth. "I think this was a bone thrown to the AFL-CIO by President Jimmy Carter to make them happy," he said. "This is the same policy that was used in the 50s; if you can't control something, pull out and try to torpedo it." Subhish Kannappan, an MSU economics professor, worked with the ILO as a visiting professor at the International Institute for Labor Relations. He stressed that the ILO does have problems, the withdrawal will hurt the United States as well as the organization. "I would feel a sense of regret if any country withdrew, particularly the United States, because we have so much to offer in terms of our own experience in providing social justice," he said.

The most important issues today are improving social justice, equity and economic growth in countries around the world and between rich and poor countries, Kannappan said. "There is a growing sense that the fruits of economic growth are still not reaching the poorest segment of the population in developing nations," he added. "Such a gloomy situation spawns cynicism and despair abroad as well as within this country. So to provide leadership in this context requires a purposive stamina and ability to stay above the inevitable ideological battles found in any international organization." The withdrawal may be viewed as a criticism of other international agencies and cause increased cynicism of United Nations organizations, Kannappan said. Moreover, the United States would lose goodwill and the opportunity to influence events, he added.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

GOURMET FOOD FROM ALL OF CHINA

At Imperial Gardens only original Chinese dishes are served. The experienced chefs prepare three styles of Chinese cuisine: the Cantonese style, featuring lightly flavored dishes; the famous Peking duck from the north; and the Szechuan style, which is the specialty of the house at Imperial Gardens.

This Szechuan style features spicy dishes such as chicken with peanuts, governor's shrimp or shredded beef. For those who prefer a lighter flavor, the Cantonese style offers the Family delight chicken shrimp, lobster, crab, chicken almondine, and Chinese vegetables. Of course Imperial Gardens always makes delicious chop suey, chow mein or egg foo yong.

Another specialty of the house is the tasty tropical fruit drinks: frozen daiquiries, punches, and other special concoctions. Draft beer and fine wines are also served.

Businessmen's lunches are offered during the week at special prices. A large variety of weekend specials are priced considerably lower than those in the menu. Group dinners for a number of people are also available. With specials and a wide price range, lunch or dinner at Imperial Gardens is delicious and affordable.

And if you're short of time, call first, and your dinner can be ready to carry out.

'Holiday on Ice' gleams

State News Kay McKeever

A whirling skater from "Holiday on Ice" executes a quick movement during their appearance at Lansing Civic Center.

By STEVESZILAGYI
State News Reviewer

Monster-sized Muppets, precision skating and lots of flesh are all part of the gaudy extravaganza of the 1978 edition of Holiday on Ice this week at the Lansing Civic Center.

Like its sister show, the Ice Follies, and its scores of imitators, Holiday on Ice bases its success on a tried and true formula of colorful, excessive entertainment.

The basic secret of the show is that it does its best to appeal to everyone. For the little kids, there's Bert and Ernie, Cookie Monster, Big Bird, and the rest of the gang from Sesame Street, all gliding out on the ice to the shouts of hundreds of tiny voices from the cheap seats.

For those too old to get a charge out of Big Bird, there's the Ice Holidettes (no kidding, that's what they're called), who with the rest of the gorgeous girls — and in the past few years, gorgeous guys — whiz around the ice in the skimpiest costumes this side of Vegas.

And for the rest, there is proven comedy, tight choreography, and the garish, dazzling mix of light and color that is the trademark of such a show.

The result is the biggest display of truly escapist entertainment since the Hollywood films of the 1930s. With the costumed skaters and symmetrical stage design, the whole thing is as stunning and far from real life as a Busby Berkeley musical.

Holiday on Ice continues through Saturday at the Lansing Civic Center.

Theater opens

The Black Arts Theater Club of Lansing Community College will be opening its first season with three one act plays this weekend.

The plays will be presented at the Genessee Community Center at 8 p.m. Friday through Sunday, Nov. 20.

Tickets are $1.50 for adults and $1.00 for students. Children under 12 will be admitted free. Tickets will be available at the door.

The club will perform two comedies by Douglas Turner Ward, Brotherhood, and Happy Ending, and a drama by William Wellington Mackey, Requiem For Brother X.

The Black Arts Theater Club is a non-profit student organization promoting black awareness of the arts.

'Heroes': shellshock for fun and profit

By BYRON BAKER
State News Reviewer

Heroes, Henry Winkler's first starring screen vehicle, is an attempt to draw the makings of a screwball comedy from the serious and sensitive situation faced by returning war-shocked Vietnam veterans. Director Jeremy Paul Kagan and scenarists James Carabatsos and David Freeman have apparently tried to instill well-intentioned and basically humanistic ideas into the project, but they have failed almost completely. The film is appallingly artificial and forced — belittling and trivializing its subject.

For the record, this is not the first attempt by Hollywood to transform the plight of troubled Vietnam vets into a comic film — back when Timothy Bottoms was hot, Twentieth Century-Fox cast him in something called The Crazy World of Julius Vrooder, described at the time as "a wildly funny combination of M*A*S*H and The Hospital. The film quickly sank.

A fate, incidentally, not likely to befall Heroes. The film has as they say in the trade papers, "opened strong." And, if one drives past the Spartan Twin Theatre around the time of a scheduled showing, an impressive queue of shivering patrons can be viewed awaiting admission. Maybe its appeal can be traced to a national obsession with seeing the Fonzy sans leather jacket. It cannot have a great deal to do with the film itself.

Briefly, the story concerns the adventures of would-be worm farmer (cute) Jack Dunne (Winkler) as he seeks to escape the Manhattan vet hospital where he is undergoing (some badly needed) psychiatric treatment. His dream is to make his way across the country, reunite with his war buddies, and found a worm farm in Eureka, Calif.

Along the way, he encounters Carol (Sally Field), a woman in the process of fleeing her impending marriage who gradually (inevitably) becomes involved with Dunne. He has less luck with his buddies; Ken (played by Harrison Ford of Star Wars, giving the only really solid and valid performance in the picture) is a lost soul who drives his car aimlessly about country roads; Adcox, who has abandoned his wife and family to drift, and Monroe — the driving force behind all of Dunne's actions regarding the worm farm — turns out to be much less interested in the farm than Dunne had imagined.

We need some serious and pointed films about the problems of the veterans of a war we have since disowned, but this isn't it. All the vets depicted in the picture (including Dunne) are supposedly lovable loonies in the manner of the gang in Cuckoo's Nest, but this subject and its implications seem too real to bear that sort of stylization without a darker and more sophisticated approach.

Winkler and Field aren't really to blame here; their work is clearly related to the approach of the film's creators. Obviously, someone at Universal made the clear choice to make a cartoon about the difficulties of returning veterans, and leave a more serious treatment to others.

The entire company assembles on the ice, backed by the stars and stripes and their name in dazzling electric lights.

Andrews': bawdy fun

By BYRON BAKER
State News Reviewer

Michigan director Tony Richardson's recent film of Henry Jones' Joseph Andrews has some of the most lively and hostile critical response that any film has garnered in recent years. The prevailing mood has been that Richardson has tiredly, and above all, unsuccessfully attempted to mine gold from the Fielding novel. Richardson, after all, made much of his reputation from his well-remembered 1963 Academy Award-winning film of Fielding's Tom Jones.

The critical consensus was, in brief, bleak. Indeed, there is some industry speculation as to whether Paramount, which jointly financed the film (United Artists, and holds distribution rights) would have extended its release date. For one reason or another, the studio has lately seemed to put the film in film) is a humble footman to the buxom and randy Lady Booby (Ann-Margret), who seems unduly attracted to the lad. But her lustful attentions cannot faze Joseph, who is pure, stalwart and saving himself for his true love, the equally humble Fanny (well played by Natalie Ogle).

They become involved in various plot machinations with sundry fold, often to within several inches of their lives (Dame Fortune, providence and pluck seem always to come through for them). The activity sprawls against the bright countryside and filthy cities of 18th century England, giving production designer Michael Annals and director of photography David Watkin an opportunity to mount a production awash with light, movement and color, complimenting Richardson's tone of rapid, good-natured farce all the way to its obligatory happy conclusion.

The director has been more than ably assisted here by his fast moving, rowdy, and features enough plot and action to overflow four or five pictures — all executed with the same kind of dash and panache as Richardson's 'Jones' film, but 'Joseph Andrews' is somehow breezier and even more antic than the earlier film. The often complex action and situations thereof seemed densely packed during a viewing of the film, but in retrospect, it's difficult to do the justice. Young Joseph is played with verve, skill and by Peter Firth, soon to be as the boy in the Equus cast. Firth is fine as the young and handsome Joseph, and Ann-Margret is more than suited to the role of Lady Booby (with her recent work in The Last Remake of Beau Geste, a familiar sort of role for her lately). But the real thespian pleasure to be derived from Joseph Andrews is in the rich supporting cast.

It seems that whenever a sizably budgeted picture is made in Britain, all sorts of talented native actors turn out for the casting, as if to keep their hands in. Excellent here are the likes of Beryl Reid, Jim Dale, Michael Hordern, Hugh Griffith, John Gielgud, and others.

Joseph Andrews is at the Meridian Eight Theatres.

A player raises his hands in supplication in Euripides' "The Bacchae," to be presented by the Justin Morrill College experimental theater Saturday and Sunday at 8:15 p.m. in McDonel Hall Kiva. A matinee will also be given at 2 p.m. Sunday. There is no admission charge.

Daniel Viglietti concert Sunday

Uruguayan songwriter and political dissident Daniel Viglietti will appear in concert 8 p.m. Sunday in 109 Anthony Hall.

Viglietti is one of the foremost Latin American songwriters in the world. He has appeared throughout South America, Europe, Africa, and both coasts of North America. This is his first visit to the Midwest.

Viglietti has a background in classical music, and performed for many years with official institutions in his native Uruguay. Because of political upheavals in 1972, Viglietti was imprisoned, and now lives in exile in France.

He now sings songs of oppression, protest, and Latin American life, accompanying himself on guitar. Much of his music is based on Latin American rhythms and styles.

The concert is sponsored by NICH (Non-Intervention in Chile) and the ASMSU Programming Board. Tickets are $3.50 in advance at Elderly Instruments or from NICH, and are $4 at the door.

MSU survey: 'social TV'

By CHRIS KUCZYNSKI
State News Staff Writer

A survey by an MSU telecommunication professor and a graduate student indicates nearly one-third of the people who watch cable television in East Lansing do so in someone else's home.

"We could be seeing a resurgence of social television," said Joey Reagan, Ph.D. candidate and co-author of the study. "It's similar to the 50s when all the people in the neighborhood would gather to watch the only television on the block."

The survey indicates that the most popular broadcast on WELM-TV (cable 11), the local public access channel, is MSU hockey games.

More than 17 percent of the 285 persons surveyed have watched MSU hockey, with nearly four percent watching the sporting event every week. The study was funded by the East Lansing Cable Communications Commission, which is the governing board of the East Lansing cable system. The East Lansing cable code requires that one cable television channel will be designated as a public access channel. All programs on the public access channel are produced by unpaid volunteers.

"Clearly, public access television has to be considered the new frontier of the communications industry," said Thomas Muth, associate professor of Telecommunications and co-author of the report.

"If locally-produced programming can compete with broadcast television, as this study indicates, the conclusion is that the broadcasters are not adequately serving community needs, and the communities are both willing and able to produce acceptable local programming to fill the void," Muth said.

Reagan said the survey suggests that 35 percent of the approximately 10,000 households in East Lansing are subscribers to cable television.

Results of the study were released in conjunction with the opening of a state-wide conference to be held at the East Lansing Public Library today at 9:30 a.m.

The conference is open to all those interested, Reagan said.

SECOND-PLACE FINISH POSSIBLE

MSU ends season against Hawkeyes

TOM SHANAHAN
U-M first,
MSU third

All of the sudden MSU people are rooting for Ohio State to win a football game. The same team whose coach allegedly had MSU put on probation by "tipping off the NCAA."

But it's easy to understand why MSU is rooting for Woody Hayes' Buckeyes. If Ohio State beats Michigan and MSU beats Iowa, the Spartans finish second in the Big Ten. It could be the first time anybody has broken the Big Two of the Big Ten since Northwestern did in 1971.

In the locker room after the Northwestern win Saturday, MSU senior outside linebacker Mike Dean was trying to decide which one he hated the least. Finally he decided it would be better if Ohio State wins, as much as he said he hates the Bucks.

But all this talk doesn't matter. Both Michigan and MSU are going to win Saturday, which sends Michigan to the Rose Bowl and puts MSU in third place behind the Big Two's annual tie for first.

The Spartans are in for a brutal game at Iowa, but one they can win. They've avoided injuries in the past three games. Injuries would have cost them the Iowa game had they occurred in the past three games.

MSU defensive tackle Larry Bethea says the Spartans have motivation to win for a second place finish, but adds the fact that Iowa beat MSU in Spartan Stadium last year may be more motivation.

As for the Michigan game, it's been picked both ways as a one point game.

But you don't beat Michigan in Ann Arbor. Forget all the talk that Ohio State is mad about losing 22-0 last year and will pay them back.

When the game has this much riding on it, that isn't enough. When Ohio State was beating Michigan every year it didn't matter what the score was the previous year. The Buckeyes were still the big boys who were getting the No. 1 ranking during the season.

Even though they lost to MSU and had to beat Michigan in 1974 to tie for the championship, they would still beat Michigan.

Now the roles are reversed. Last year the Wolverines lost their No. 1 ranking when Purdue upset them but still beat Ohio State. It will be the same story this year because now Michigan and coach Bo Schembechler are the big boys in the Big Ten during this mini-era of the two schools' domination of Big Ten football.

By MICHAEL KLOCKE
State News Sports Writer
All MSU needs to finish second in the Big Ten is a win over Iowa Saturday . . . and a little help from their good friend at Ohio State, Woody Hayes.

Good friend? Not too many Spartan fans would refer to Hayes in that manner — especially since Hayes admitted he turned MSU in to the NCAA for rule violations.

It has been quite a while since people around East Lansing have wanted Woody's Buckeyes to win a game. But they'll be rooting for them on Saturday.

If Ohio State defeats Michigan at Ann Arbor and MSU wins at Iowa, the "Big Two" will be broken up for the first time since 1971. MSU currently has a 5-1-1 conference record while Michigan's record is 6-1.

But all this speculation is academic if the Spartans lose to Iowa, and despite the Hawkeyes rather poor 4-6 record, Darryl Rogers has the utmost respect for them.

"Iowa is an extremely aggressive football team. They have outstanding defensive players," Rogers said. "Our offensive people are going to have quite a test against them."

The way things have turned out this season for the Hawkeyes, it would seem that the schedule maker is not on their side. They had to play UCLA right after the Bruins had lost to Minnesota. They also met Michigan right after the Wolverines had lost to Minnesota. And it can be pretty hard for teams that good to be down two weeks in a row.

But the Hawkeyes have something to shoot at Saturday just like MSU. Iowa has a chance to finish tied for fourth if they can beat MSU.

Rogers said the real strength of Iowa is their defense and the Hawkeyes do have individual standouts. Linebacker Tom Rusk is a candidate for post season honors and his partner in the middle, Dean Moore, also drew Rogers' praise.

"We're very concerned about their defense," Rogers said. "They can really get after you. They really hit hard in last year's game (a 30-17 Hawkeye win)."

The Hawkeyes offense is centered around quarterback Tom McLaughlin and fullback John Lazar. Coach Bob Comings' offense has not been overly productive this year, although McLaughlin does rank MSU's once powerful wrestling team opens the 1977-78 season this weekend in the first annual Michigan State Invitational Tournament today and Saturday.

The meet brings eight teams together at the Men's Building Sports Arena. The tournament starts Friday night at 7 p.m. with 40 matches scheduled. It resumes action Saturday noon with 80 duels scheduled.

The seven schools joining MSU are Central Michigan, Grand Rapids Junior College, Grand Valley State, Indiana State, Northern Michigan, Toledo and Western Michigan.

MSU coach Grady Peninger is still in the rebuilding stage—his team after the Spartans had dominated Big Ten wrestling in the late 1960s and early 1970s. Peninger has never had a team finish below .500.

Each team will bring two wrestlers. All matches will be six minutes in length instead of the usual eight.

The tourney is being sponsored by the Takedown club and MSU. There is a charge for all students and for adults.

Women open today

The MSU women's basketball team will unveil its 1977-78 edition today in the Women's Intramural Building.

The Spartans are having a Green-White intrasquad scrimmage starting at 4:30 p.m. in the gymnasium on the main floor of the Women's Intramural Building.

The Spartans have a hard act to follow after last season's superb showing. MSU ran a 23-6 mark en route to a place in the Big Ten, state regional championships and berth in the national championship tournament to top.

Highlights this season include a trip to a prestigious holiday tournament in York and hosting a regional tourney at Jenison Field.

Club Sports

The Men's Varsity club will meet Sunday at 6:30 p.m. in the Varsity club room at Spartan Stadium. MSU basketball coach Jud Heathcote will be the featured speaker. All varsity letter winners are invited to attend. The Women's Varsity will also meet Sunday in the lounge at the Women's Building. All Women varsity letter winners are invited to attend.

DON SPICKLER Watch but don't listen

EDITOR'S NOTE: Three years ago as a young sportswriter, Don Spickler declared his love for the Spartans with a column urging fans to pack freezing Spartan Stadium rather than watch the Big Ten on TV. Needless to say the Spartans demolished Iowa 60-21, U-M lost 12-10 in Columbus. Spickler says today's column was initially penned in blood.

SO WHO DO YOU THINK WILL WIN?
For the past week people have asked the question mentioned above. I tell them we can really beat Iowa if the boys are fired up, but it will be a close one.

"No, man. Will you wake up? We mean the Michigan-OSU game..."

I know they mean that game, but frankly it's been years since I wrestled with loyalty problems over which game to watch. And for the last four years sights have focused on the MSU game. I've cared little over what happens in Ann Arbor or Columbus.

But this year we should watch the Michigan game with the sound turned down. Have the radio turned up for the MSU game.

Root for OSU. Just once let's see MSU finish on top in the standings.

Selfish you say?
Just once let's get back at Don Canham for selling two tickets per seat at those sell-out extravaganzas. Let's see Michigan suffer a little embarrassment.

I would personally rather see MSU at the next Michigan-represented Rose Bowl than once again watch Bo's players lose to some team out west.

Just once I would like to see Michigan fall far short of the national championship and a near-perfect record. Just once let's see them not in second, but in third.

Let's face it. U of M has just taken this state for all it's worth. U of M could just as easily have been put through the b.s. of probation. U of M is not all that better of a place.

Let's make people aware of the other team.
U of M has taken over so badly that the disgusting voice of "Mr. Meechigan" Bob Ufer booms over WJR instead of the more objective fatherly tones of Bob Reynolds with Spartan football.

Just once let Ray Lane and Chris McClure be the guys broadcasting the better team's game. Hooray for WCAR!
Go State Go! But I hope Woody gets his pants beat in the Rose Bowl.

Icers host the Huskies

By JOE CENTERS
State News Sports Writer

There are two teams that hockey coach Amo Bessone likes to beat more than anybody else — that team from Ann Arbor and Michigan Tech.

The Spartans played even up last weekend with that team from Ann Arbor and they will get their shot at Tech as they host the Huskies tonight and Saturday. Both games start at 7:30 p.m.

"We know we're in for a tough weekend," Bessone said. "They play you physical but they play you good. They body check, they fore check, checking is their game."

MSU and Tech are tied for fifth place with Colorado College in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association (WCHA) with 3-3 records.

Last year the two teams split their four games with each team winning one at home and one on the road.

Tech is coming from a sweep of the University of Minnesota-Duluth by beating the Bulldogs in Houghton 4-1 and 6-5. Freshman Bret Berken's lone goal of the weekend was the winner Saturday as the Huskies almost let a 5-1 second period score slip away.

Tech has 21 letter winners back from last fall and coach John MacInnes also has 18 rookies. Six freshmen have been playing regularly for the Huskies — so MacInnes, like Bessone, has inexperience on his team.

Tech does have its four leading scorers back from last season in Warren Young, Dave Joelson, Rodger Moy and Stu Ostlund. Joelson leads this year's team scoring with five goals and five assists.

The goaltending for Tech has been split this season by Bruce Horsch, Spartan defenseman Mitch Horsch's older brother, John Rockwell and Nick Dudley, from East Lansing. Horsch has played in five of Tech's eight games and is ranked among the top goalies in the WCHA.

The Spartans go into the game still a little sore from last weekend. They are definitely without the services of Ted Heusing who has a separated sternum and Mitch Horsch who has a sore shoulder. Ken Pareskevinn, who Bessone thought would miss this weekend because of internal bleeding, skated all week and may suit up against Tech.

After four weeks of line changes, Bessone said he has found two lines he's going to stick with. His checking line is Tim McDonald, Mark DeCenzo and Joey Campbell. The other line, made up of three of the team's top five scorers, is Tony Jelacie, Leo Lynett and Russ Welch. Darryl DiPace, tied for second in team scoring, will skate with Pareskevinn — if he plays — and Heusing's replacement.

Swimmers start fast with optimism, new coach

By JOHN SINGLER
State News Sports Writer

The early days of the 1977-78 MSU women's swimming and diving season are any indication, Spartan foes are in for a long, hard winter.

There's a new coach, Joel Feldmann, a new-found spirit among members of the team and soaking Western Michigan in the men's debut last week made things all the merrier around the men's Intramural Building.

"There haven't been a lot of changes and it's always hard for the kids to adjust to a new coach," Feldmann said. "Our first meet, against Western, was encouraging."

Eleven freshmen joined 15 veterans on this year's squad and Audrey Flood, a frosh freestyler from Niles, made quite a splash in her MSU opener, winning the 500-yard freestyle.

Freestyle is expected to be the Spartans' strength in the early part of the campaign. Besides Flood, depth is provided by Melinda Whitcomb, a New York senior, and Linda Mrosko, a freshman from Birmingham. Whitcomb holds an MSU record in the 50-yard freestyle, in addition to swimming on three record-setting relay teams.

Lately at MSU, an outstanding Spartan performance in the breaststroke has usually spelled Kathy Kolon. The junior, from Southfield, has a hand in four MSU records and is the Big Ten's defending champion in the breaststroke and individual medley.

"Diving has been strong before and it'll be strong again," Feldmann said. Under the tutelage of John Narcy, Spartan divers won a recent exhibition, beating a highly regarded squadron of divers from the U-M, Narcy's alma mater.

Annette Kubiske was a Michigan high school diving champ last year in Ypsilanti. Jeannie Mickle, a state diving champ at Mt.

Clemens High School in 1975, returns to the Spartans. Florida State transfer student Pat McDonnell and freshman Sue Fredley round out the diving team.

Feldmann studied as an undergraduate at Westchester State College, in Pennsylvania, and the University of Colorado before completing her master's program at Wayne State. She earned All-American honors while in college, swimming the 50-yard freestyle and backstroke and the 100-yard freestyle and backstroke.

Dridders journey to Iowa in the league in passing. The game comes down to a duel, it looks as though Spartans will have a disadvantage. MSU punter Stachowicz continues to be the Big Ten in punting and kicker Hans Nielsen leads the league in kick scoring. Holsclaw does all the leg work for the Hawkeyes and he has not been effective punting only 36 yards a final record 7-3-1, and they would go into the recruiting season coming off five straight victories.

"I just want to beat Iowa," Rogers said. "I'm not much for speculating to the future or looking at the past. All I'm concerned about is this week."

Lie detectors could be outlawed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States faces an increase in drug abuse and retailers will continue to lose billions of dollars from dishonest employees if lie detectors are banned, a drug store industry spokesman says.

The prediction from Ty Kelley of the National Association of Chain Drug Stores came Wednesday during Senate hearings on a bill to prohibit most uses of lie detectors by employers trying to find out if employees and job applicants are honest.

"A ban on polygraph tests will enhance the spread of drug abuse across the nation since the potential for drug diversion will increase," Kelley told the Senate subcommittee on the Constitution.

Kelley and other trade association spokesmen said retail losses are estimated at $7.2 billion a year, with thefts by employees accounting for up to 70 percent of the total.

The problem is particularly acute in drug stores, Kelley said, because of the potential for addicts getting jobs to feed their habits.

Some witnesses and panel chairman Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., have said lie detectors are notoriously inaccurate — only slightly better at determining the truth than flipping a coin.

They also say the tests are an unconstitutional invasion of privacy because examiners ask embarrassing personal questions such as, "Have you had any extramarital affairs?" and "How often do you change your underwear?" said David Lino-wes, chairman of the defunct Privacy Protection Study Commission.

Harry Hunter, representing the National Association of Convenience Stores, said his clients need lie detectors because they hire as clerks primarily those willing to work for low wages or whose work ethic "operates at a very low level" — people who are "under 25 years of age, single or divorced and grew to physical maturity during a period of civil unrest in the United States."

They also say the tests are an unconstitutional invasion of privacy because examiners ask embarrassing personal questions such as, "Have you had any extramarital affairs?" and "How often do you change your underwear?" said David Lino-

Liquor law considered

LANSING (UPI) — Rep. Casmer P. Ogonowski, D-Detroit, introduced legislation Wednesday which would permit the sale of liquor beginning at 10 a.m. on Sunday, two hours earlier than in current law.

Ogonowski said the measure was prompted by the "increasing popularity" of Sunday brunches being offered by many restaurants.

"These brunches are generally the equivalent of a complete meal, not just a breakfast, and people often would enjoy a drink with their brunch," Ogonowski said.

"In the same way, many bowling alleys have Sunday morning leagues for people working night shifts," he said.

Ogonowski described the current time constraints on day drinking as arbitrary and unpopular.

The legislation also would permit the sale of liquor beginning at 10 a.m. on New Year's Day. Currently, sales must begin at 12 a.m.

"Allowing drinks to be sold until 4 a.m. doesn't necessarily mean that we are encouraging drunkenness," he said, "closing the bars at 2 a.m. is encouraging illegal after-hours establishments at the expense of the businesses who are licensed establishments."

Coffeehouse held tonight

A campuswide Christian coffeehouse will be held from 7:30 to 11 tonight in the Brody Multi-purpose rooms, featuring music by five campus groups and one other band.

The first campuswide coffeehouse was held in Shaw Hall's Lower Lounge in 1975 with an attendance of 400 according to coordinator Mike Redoutey. Almost a thousand people showed for the 1976 coffeehouse in Brody, he added.

Donations will be accepted to cover costs of refreshments and other expenses for the coffeehouse. The event is sponsored by the Spirit of Christ fellowship and Campus Action.

THE CLOWNS

"The Clowns is not only the work of a master but it is also of a piece with his finest creations. Further, the film is, as all great works are, all things for all men and a very special film for all those with special sensitivities. It is, perhaps above all, the epitome of the humanism that has distinguished Fellini's work... Essentially, The Clowns is the quintessential documentary."

—Judith Crist New York

Federico Fellini's film humorously explores his fascination with the circus, down to a source of images, passions, moods, humor, comedy and pathos. One of his most colorful and most original films, it is a masterpiece in another, the film is an allegory where the world is a circus and we are its clowns. For a finale, Fellini depicts a circus as a surrealistic clown funeral complete with procession, fire brigade, and tribute of trumpets played to a deserted town.

ASMSU NEEDS BOARD CHAIRPERSON

Applications being accepted

The deadline date to file for the office of ASMSU Program Board Chairperson has been extended because so few applications have been received, according to current chairperson Sherri Gatto.

has applied for the job as Programing Board Chairperson.

The chairperson administers about 20 organizations and handles a budget of about $100,000, she said.

"You do everything from battling the Union for space to getting parking permits," she explained.

"The programing board chairperson is well recognized with the administration.

"The job is also valuable employment experience," she said.

"It is good to say you four-pointed a management class, but more important to say you managed a $100,000 budget and handled 20 different groups," she commented. Gatto said she will discuss the duties and job of the programing chairperson to any interested applicants. Her office hours are 3-5 p.m. Monday through Friday in 332 Student Services Bldg. Applications can also be picked up in 307 Student Services Bldg.

Legal services in limbo over attorney

McAdam contends Smith has wanted the job as legal services attorney. Smith has previously expressed his opinion to the program to McAdam and the interviewing committee, he added.

There were candidates interviewed by the committee who have experience with other legal services programs in Jackson and Ottawa counties, McAdam said.

Members of the ad hoc committee said they selected Smith because of his experience as ASU attorney.

Mr. Smith had an advantage over the other candidates because of his 12 years experience as a student attorney," Carr said. Carr and Lehrter both supported Carr's evaluation of Smith. However, McAdam agreed with their reasoning, the fact that Smith's been for 12 years does not mean he is going to hand him the job on a silver platter. Just because he's had past experience and associations does not mean he's the only one for the job, McAdam said.

Smith, however, said Wednesday he does not believe there is any other candidate with equal qualifications. He doesn't think there is any question that I'm number one," he said.

"The interview process was not to decide who was number one, but a fight over who was going to be second. I know I'm number one in experience, background and ability."

McAdam disagreed with Smith's assessment of the process.

"I don't see how Ken Smith can make that distinction or statement. Is he saying the entire selection committee was biased from the start?" McAdam asked.

Smith said the new legal services program was designed "to push litigation down the students' throats." He added that he wants the program to be realistic.

"I don't want the University to get sued and I want the students to get their money's worth," he commented. Smith said he is concerned that another attorney not familiar with student needs might be irresponsible in handling cases.

McAdam said the purpose of the program is "not to push litigation down the students' throats, but to build a legal clinic for students."

McAdam said he was also concerned that Smith would, not be a full-time lawyer as the program guidelines specify, since Smith has a lucrative private law practice.

Smith, however, said "I'm basically willing to quit my private practice. I've started phasing out already by being selective and dropping clients. If someone gives me the go-ahead you can better believe you'll see some damn fast movement."

Should Smith get the nod for senior attorney, he would receive $20,000 per year, with the attorney contract renewable each year.

Though $20,000 would be considerably less than what Smith makes in his private practice, he said "I've made some good investments along the way."

Midwife holds sessions on homebirth practices

By DANA FELMY
State News Staff Writer

This is the second of a three part series dealing with giving birth at home. Today's story looks at the way a local midwife handles the responsibilities of home birth.

The young, curly blond woman was busy setting up uterine diagrams, drawing a three-month-old fetus on the blackboard and getting out refreshments for a roomful of expectant mothers and their companions.

Marcia Russell, a 30-year-old lay midwife, was getting ready to teach basic obstetrics, and suddenly, all thoughts of little old women and boiling water disappear.

A midwife is a woman who assists at childbirth. Russell has practiced midwifery in the Lansing area five years. Recently she started teaching classes outlined by the Association for Childbirth at Home International in St. Johns Student Center, 327 M.A.C. Avenue.

"Because couples are having home birth, they have to take more responsibility at home than in the hospital," Russell said, explaining the purpose of her classes.

It's important for a mother to always be in control and not panic during a home delivery she maintains. "You're only in control with education. No education, no control. It especially helps to have someone learn with the mother," she said.

This is especially true for men. Besides being a comfort to the mother, a man could be helpful in the actual delivery, she said. "A lot of fathers come up to me at the last minute and say they want to catch their baby," Russell said. It helps if they have some knowledge of how to handle the baby if that case should arise, she said.

The classes are now in their third week of a six week period. So far, Russell has taught the advantages of a home birth and what to expect during a normal birth. In the following weeks she will cover how to deal with fear, or difficulties that may arise during birth, and massaging techniques given during labor.

Russell stressed, however, that the class was not adequate to train someone to become a midwife. "People are always coming up to me and saying they want to become midwives. To me, it's not easy," she said.

Nor is it over. Since the time she attended a home birth with a local doctor five years ago, she has observed many births, read all the articles and books she could find on obstetrics and new infants, and caught 19 babies on her own within the past year.

"The first time I ever caught a baby," Russell said. "I thought 'Boy, that's easier than I thought it would be.' It's one of the neatest feelings I've ever had. Almost as good as having your own baby. It's really something to hold a brand new, slippery baby in your hands," she said.

Russell sometimes brings her three-year-old daughter, Amy, along as an observer.

Amy started watching births when she was a month old," Russell said. "I'd love it if she became a midwife, but she'll probably be bored with it by then."

By the time Amy is old enough to catch babies, some issues surrounding home births may be gone. Until that time, Russell is trying to correct the negative images of the practice.

"Because we are at home, we have to be more careful. For example, we cannot put them on medication or lay them on their back," she said. "Besides, there are very few things that happen where you only have a few minutes to do something about them." She added that in those cases, like hemorrhages, the trained midwife will know how to handle the emergency and then take the mother to the hospital if necessary.

Russell also stressed that home birth is not for everyone. Emotionally, they may not be able to take it. Others are just trying to be cool and "that's not a good enough reason," she said.

But for women who are ready for home birth, Russell recommends it. "I think babies are better off for it," she said.

"There's no separation from the mother immediately after birth. And who can take care of a baby better than its mother?"

"It's not going to solve the problems of the world, but I think it helps," she added.

Women to hold national forum

By SARA FRITZ

HOUSTON (UPI) — The National Women's Conference, in unprecedented meetings on American women, opens a new battleground in the escalating war between feminists and the conservative opponents of equal rights.

An estimated 20,000 women — representing views as diverse as lesbianism and the Ku Klux Klan — are expected in Houston to witness the four-day conference opening today. About 2,000 of them are official delegates.

The National Women's Conference, the first such meeting of its kind in American history, was funded by a $5 million congressional appropriation with a mandate to answer the question: "What do women want?"

Feminists and conservatives both seized upon the conference as a new public forum for the battle they already have been waging in state legislatures for the last six years over the proposed Equal Rights Amendment.

The conference is being dominated by feminists, who have drafted a long platform to be enacted by the delegates including support for ERA, abortion and lesbian rights. The final document will be submitted to Congress and the president.

Followers of ERA opponent Phyllis Schlafly, who viewed the feminists' proposals as "anti-family," promised to offer an alternative platform condemning ERA, abortion, sex education, homosexuality and pornography.

The conservatives admit their proposals likely will be defeated by a 4-1 margin, but they hope to win stature in the public eye. Both sides already are jockeying for the attention of some 1,000 reporters covering the conference.

Schlafly, a potential Senate candidate, is not a delegate to the convention. She nonetheless has set up her own headquarters, and she will be the featured speaker at a big counter-rally Saturday.

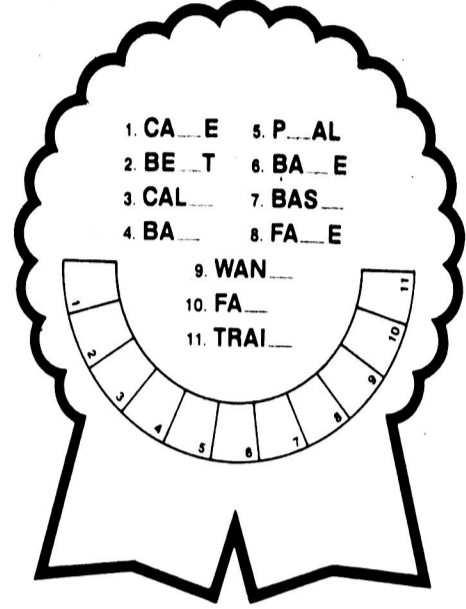

The Klan, the John Birch Society and other conservative groups have promised to support Schlafly. Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton told a reporter recently the Klan's Women's Auxiliary may disrupt the meeting.

Security will be tight during the conference, much of it provided by the Secret Service. First Lady Rosalyn Carter is a scheduled speaker along with two of her predecessors, Betty Ford and Lady Bird Johnson. Pat Nixon was not invited.

Conference leaders decided Wednesday that the issues of abortion and lesbian rights will not be debated until the final hours of the meeting next Monday.
