Dapsone, taken by U.S. troops, found to cause cancer in rats

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
WASHINGTON (AP) — A drug taken by tens of thousands of American troops in Vietnam as part of a medical experiment has been found to cause cancer in rats in tests by the National Cancer Institute.

The drug, dapsone, is the principal treatment for the estimated 12 million leishmaniasis cases throughout the world, including 10 million in the United States. But Army doctors tested it on GIs in South Vietnam as a preventive medicine for a severe form of malaria that was resistant to standard malaria pills.

A report published Monday of the institute's laboratory studies in which rats and mice were fed dapsone in large doses showed the drug caused cancer of the spleen and the lining of the abdomen in male rats.

The institute tested dapsone as one of 326 substances it is checking for evidence of cancer-causing activity in what it calls the carcinogenesis bioassay program.

Dr. Cipriano Cueto, a data evaluation expert at the National Cancer Institute, said the findings don't prove dapsone causes cancer in humans. But he said the results would justify following up the case histories of people who have taken the drug to determine whether they experience greater incidences of spleen cancer or other malignancies than the population as a whole.

At least one such study in the 1960s of the medical records of about 850 American lepers who took the drug did not show a significant difference in the cancer death rate when compared to the general population.

The scientists reported that the tests showed no cancer-causing activity in female rats, or in mice.

An Army spokesperson said Monday, "We don't have the foggiest idea" how many troops took dapsone in Vietnam, and to find out would take at least a month of intensive research. He added that the troops who were given the drug weren't told it was being used experimentally.

Use of dapsone was restricted primarily to the Central Highlands region and the area known as I Corps, the five northernmost provinces of South Vietnam. Several Army and Marine divisions with thousands of men in each fought for years in the jungles of the two regions where a particularly dangerous form of malaria was believed to be a threat.

"Prior to its introduction in Vietnam, the drug was approved as a new investigational drug by the Food and Drug Administration," the Army spokesperson, Maj. David Gardner, told The Associated Press.

An investigational new drug is one the FDA considers of possible benefit to humans and approves for experimental treatment of a specific disease under carefully controlled conditions.

Gardner said dapsone was used by the Army only in Vietnam and then "only where recommended by the appropriate medical authority." He said it did prove to be effective in preventing plasmodium falciparum, a rare but unusually severe strain of malaria.

Wayne Pines, a spokesperson for the FDA, said the only approved use of dapsone in the United States is in the treatment of leprosy.

Egypt cuts diplomatic ties with five Arab countries

CAIRO (AP) — Egypt broke diplomatic relations Monday with the five Arab countries that met in Libya to form a "resistance" front against President Anwar Sadat's peace initiative with Israel.

A Foreign Ministry spokesperson named five as Syria, Libya, Algeria, Iraq and South Yemen. The move produced the most serious political division in the Arab world in years.

"At this point only diplomatic relations will be affected," the spokesperson said, adding that Egypt acted "in response to the decision announced in Tripoli, Libya, to sever relations with Egypt."

The five hardline Arab countries and the Palestine Liberation Organization met in Tripoli. All except Iraq agreed early Monday to form a "resistance and confrontation front" to oppose Egypt's overtures to Israel and denounced Sadat's peace campaign as "high treason."

They also declared the "freeze" in relations with Cairo.

Iraq, still feuding with Syria, walked out of the conference without signing the declaration.

Libya had unilaterally severed relations with Egypt when Sadat made his historic visit to Jerusalem Nov. 19-21.

Despite the harsh rhetoric, however, the anti-Egypt summit, at Syria's insistence, had carefully kept the door open for renewed Geneva peace talks or other forms of negotiations with Israel, with or without Sadat.

The "hardliners" also had stopped short of declaring an irreparable break with Egypt.

Sadat said Sunday that the Soviet Union was behind the "rubbish" of the Tripoli summit and that Egypt could "punish" the Russians.

Over the weekend, it was reported that

Egypt was recalling its ambassador to Moscow, but there was no immediate indication whether Sadat was considering severing his already cool diplomatic ties with the Soviet Union.

In Washington, the State Department said it would have no immediate comment on the Egyptian move.

The United States appeared Monday to be trying to reclaim the initiative as a mediator in the Middle East. U.S. officials in Washington said Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance would visit Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia beginning this weekend to assess prospects for a comprehensive settlement.

They said Vance might also visit Syria and that Egypt's mass cutoff of diplomatic relations would not affect the trip.

The last such serious break in Arab ranks occurred in 1971, when Syria and Egypt broke relations with Jordan over King Hussein's bloody expulsion of Palestinian guerrillas from his country.

The Iraqis, for years Syria's main Arab rivals, denounced Syrian President Hafez Assad in Tripoli for what they called his continued faith in "surrender solutions."

Sadat so far has won the firm support of only such peripheral Arab states as Morocco and Sudan.

The break in relations seemed to indicate Sadat has given up hope of backing from the "hardline" countries and instead will try to ally himself with Saudi Arabia and Jordan, which thus far have stayed out of the furor over his visit to Israel.

Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafi is caught by reporters Sunday in Tripoli, Libya, while enroute to the final session of the Arab nations' summit conference at the People Palace.

The United States appeared Monday to be trying to reclaim the initiative as a mediator in the Middle East.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, during an interview Sunday in Cairo, revealed that his bold peace initiative with Israel was prompted by some secret handwritten letters President Carter sent him, although Carter did not propose the steps taken by Sadat.

Environmentalists' pleas rejected by Ingham judge

LANSING (UPI) — An Ingham County judge has turned aside an environmental challenge to oil drilling in the Pigeon River Country State Forest, ruling that the state has provided adequate anti-pollution safeguards.

"Hydrocarbons need to be developed and the environment needs to be protected at the same time," Judge Thomas L. Brown said Monday. "Progress must be allowed."

Natural Resources Commission's agreement on June 11, 1976, with three oil companies that hold leases in the forest, and on the subsequent issuance of 10 exploratory drilling permits.

Brown said the commission "wrestled with a difficult problem and made a difficult, thoughtful decision." He described the agreement as "an honest decision, honestly arrived at by honest men."

streams — the Black and Pigeon Rivers — as well as deer, bear, bobcat and elk.

The oil companies also agreed to a wide range of environmental controls — including cash payments for trees removed — and stringent state monitoring of drilling operations.

After two months of trial, Brown rejected environmentalists' contention that hydrocarbon development would lead to what the Michigan Environmental Protection Act describes as "pollution, impairment and destruction."

Under the June agreement, drilling was limited to the southern third of the forest, a primitive expanse of swamp and timber containing two of the state's best trout

Nevertheless, Conner contended that the commission had failed to determine whether drilling would lead to pollution impairment and destruction. He introduced testimony indicating that contamination of ground and surface water is inevitable.

Roger Conner, attorney for the West Michigan Environmental Action Council, immediately asked the Michigan Court of Appeals to review the case.

Houk will not appeal Circuit Court ruling

But Brown again refused to order a halt to drill site clearing and leveling operations begun Friday by the Shell Oil Co. He did, however, grant Conner a 48-hour stay of his final order to allow filing of an appeal.

Ingham County Prosecutor Peter Houk announced Monday that he will not appeal a Circuit Court ruling which dismissed drug charges against former Michigan Rep. Dale Warner.

Charges were dropped against Warner Friday by Judge James T. Kallman on grounds that Warner was denied a speedy trial.

Warner, who represented Eaton County from 1966 to 1974, was arrested on charges of possession and use of heroin on Aug. 15, 1973, at the Motel 6 in Lansing.

"Judge Kallman's ruling was, in the broadest sense, correct," said Houk. "Four years and three months (the length of the court proceedings) was simply too long.

"We were prepared to go to court Tuesday, but we won't take exception to the judge's ruling."

The 36-year-old former legislator, who was contacted in San Francisco Sunday, said he was not bitter or interested in revenge. But he added that he does not think the treatment he received as a defendant for over four years had any resemblance to justice.

EX-EDITOR CHARGES SEX DISCRIMINATION Lansing publisher named in suit

By ANNES CROWLEY
State News Staff Writer

A recently fired female managing editor said Monday she has filed charges of sex discrimination against the publisher of Washington Watch, a weekly newsletter published in Lansing.

The managing editor, Eva Kipper, said in a complaint filed with the Michigan Department of Civil Rights, that she was demoted from a position she filled for nine months to make way for a new male employee.

Lawrence Tharp, was hired in early November on Kipper's recommendation, Poddar said.

Tharp — who last spring disrupted an MSU speech by dumping whitewash on a former CIA agent — works for nothing and was hired to "help her do a better job," Poddar said.

He was to supervise operations and review Kipper's copy, the first time she was subject to editing.

Though the fired managing editor said she had no hint her work was not up to par, Poddar said he had indicated to Kipper that he was not happy with the publication's editorial scope and felt some things had been done sloppily.

The publisher, Kipper and Tharp met several times to try to resolve the problems, but the managing editor soon refused to work in the office, Poddar said. She told him the position was "just another job," he added.

Publisher Shrikumar Poddar, a native of India who also owns Educational Subscription Services, denied the charges, saying he fired Kipper after making serious efforts to work with her.

"The charges are baseless," Poddar said. "There has been no such discrimination."

Kipper, a former business manager and secretary, took over as managing editor in February after two male co-editors were let go to cut expenses.

The men each made about twice Kipper's $6,000 salary and, according to the publisher, wrote most stories appearing in Washington Watch. Kipper produced the newspaper without supervision, but could rely on news services for some stories, Poddar said.

The editor's position had been left vacant, he added.

A new male editor, former Mid-Michigan Free Press Editor

Kipper disagreed, saying she had decided not to meet with the others without a witness and was fired for being "uncooperative."

The staff changes were announced in a publisher's note in the Dec. 2 issue which stated that Kipper was "terminated due to her actions, which were prejudicial to the interests of Washington Watch."

According to Arthur Sheffey, a claims supervisor with the state civil rights department, Kipper's complaint will probably be investigated in a few months.

London firefighter strike continues

LONDON (AP) — A young mother refused to leave her three screaming children in their burning home Monday and died with them in the worst single fire tragedy since Britain's firefighters walked off the job three weeks ago. But pre-strike predictions of high death tolls and a Britain in flames have not materialized.

children's father, William Dale, escaped the blaze at their Wisbech home about 100 miles northeast of London, and was taken to the hospital in shock.

Fifty-nine persons have died since Britain's 33,000 full-time firefighters struck 22 days ago in support of their pay demands. That's an average of about 2.7 deaths per day, compared to an average of 2.8 who die each day with regular firefighters on the job, and much lower than anticipated.

Neighbors shouted to Cheryl Dale, 24, to jump from her bedroom window, but she would not leave the children, Maxine, 6, Jason, 3, and Lisa, 2. The Vance to urge Arabs to keep 'open mind'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance is going to the Middle East next weekend to urge the Arabs to "keep an open mind" on direct negotiations between Israel and Egypt, the State Department said Monday.

Arrangements for a visit to Syria are still up in the air for "technical reasons," U.S. officials said.

Officials said the Vance mission also will be aimed at showing U.S. support for those talks, scheduled to take place in Cairo in mid-December.

"It is not our objective on this trip to get them to change their minds," department spokesperson Hodding Carter said of Syria, Jordan and Lebanon. Those three countries are boycotting the direct negotiations with Israel undertaken by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

On the trip, his third to the troubled area in less than a year, Vance will make stops in Lebanon, Jordan and Saudi Arabia, as well as in Egypt and Israel.

Nor was this "an attempt on our part to seize the stage" from the parties directly involved in the Arab-Israeli conflict, Carter said of the Vance trip.

Carter's first year draws mixed reviews

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Carter's first year in office drew mixed reviews Monday from George Meany, who told the AFL-CIO the administration's pluses are clouded by high unemployment and continued slack in the economy.

The AFL-CIO president charged that "realistic action" to deal with those problems is stymied by an apparent shift of priorities away from jobs — "the president's No. 1 campaign issue" — in an effort to please conservatives con-

For the first time, Meany also urged Carter not to reappoint Federal Reserve Board Chairperson Arthur F. Burns, who he said was "the first barrier to restoring economic health to America."

The labor leader's comments were in a report released Monday in advance of the AFL-CIO's 12th constitutional convention opening here Thursday.

Carter's election, he said, "brought into office a sense of hope and a spirit of inspiration that has brightened the land."

Ohio school strike ruled unconstitutional

Many teachers continued to boycott schools in Cleveland in protest at not having been paid, meanwhile, and teachers in Toledo threatened to walk out of classes in a similar dispute.

Budget director Alice M. Rivlin told the congressional Joint Economic Committee that such signs of "extraordinary" eco-

Driver can be forced from car

WASHINGTON (AP) — Motorists stopped for routine traffic violations may be ordered by police to get out of their cars, the Supreme Court ruled Monday. Three dissenting justices said the decision "leaves police discretion utterly without limits."

ment that an officer be able to explain the reasons for his actions signals an abandonment of effective judicial supervision... and leaves police discretion utterly without limits," Stevens said.

In deciding a Philadelphia case, the high court's six-member majority ruled that such orders are justified by concerns for police safety — concerns it called "legitimate and weighty."

In other matters Monday, the court:
• Agreed to settle a dispute over water rights between the federal government and California, a controversy with significant impact for 16 other western states. At issue is whether states legally may impose water-use conditions on federal water-management projects.

"Establishing a face-to-face confrontation diminishes the possibility, otherwise substantial, that the driver can make unobserved movements," the court said in an unsigned opinion. "This, in turn, reduces the likelihood that the officer will be the victim of an assault."

• Ruled that states may distinguish between day and night students in determining who is eligible for unemployment benefits. The decision reversed a ruling by the Idaho Supreme Court that paying benefits only to night students violated the equal-protection rights of day students.

Justice John Paul Stevens, in a strongly worded dissent in which Justices Thurgood Marshall and William J. Brennan Jr. joined, said such police actions threaten the constitutional rights of motorists to be protected against unreasonable searches.

• Refused to review an attempt by the Hunt family of Texas to collect at least $375 million from the world's seven largest oil producers for the 1973 nationalization of Hunt oil holdings in Libya.

• Agreed to decide whether the estate of the late Clay Shaw may sue former New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison for allegedly violating Shaw's civil rights by prosecuting him on charges that he conspired to assassinate President John F. Kennedy.

• Let stand a lower court's ruling that makes it easier for individuals to sue government agencies for alleged civil rights violations in employment. The court's action was a defeat for the Tennessee Valley authority, which is being sued for alleged racial bias at its Muscle Shoals, Ala., operations.

In the police-powers case, the court reversed a decision by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court that it was unconstitutional to order suspected traffic-law offenders to get out of their cars.

The state court's ruling came in the case of Harry Mimms, who was stopped by two Philadelphia policemen in 1971 after they observed that his car was carrying an expired license tag. One of the officers ordered Mimms out of the car, apparently a routine procedure for traffic offenders, and then noticed a bulge in Mimms' coat. The officer frisked Mimms and found a loaded .38-caliber pistol tucked in the waist of his trousers.

Mimms was arrested and eventually was convicted of illegal possession of a pistol and carrying a concealed deadly weapon. He already has served the maximum sentence of three years in prison.

Mimms' conviction was overturned by the state Supreme Court after he had completed his sentence. The court declared that the policeman had no good reason to order Mimms out of the car.

In reversing the high court, the Supreme Court majority said the intrusion on Mimms' rights was minimal.

"What is at most a mere inconvenience cannot prevail when balanced against legitimate concerns for the officer's safety," it said.

The court referred to "inordinate risk" police face making routine traffic stops, citing one report showing that 30 percent of all shooting police officers occur after stops.

Malaysian jetliner explodes, kills 100

JOHORE BAHRU, Malaysia (AP) — Police and government investigators grimly searched a square-mile area swamp Monday for bodies and clues to what happened in minutes before a hijacked Malaysian jetliner blew up in flight and crashed, killing 100 persons.

The task seemed insurmountable — rescue workers found nothing more than pieces of victims, the largest part of a plane recovered was two feet long, and the plane's "black box" flight recorder appeared lost.

The twin-jet Boeing 737 appeared, the metal shatters and the whole thing broke into many small pieces," Malaysian Interior Minister Ghazali Shafie said.

The crash killed all 98 passengers and seven crew members aboard the flight from Kuala Lumpur to Singapore.

Two of the foreign passengers were identified as World Bank officials from Washington, O.D. Hoerr, 41, identified as the bank as an American education planner, and S.S. Nainggolan, 47, a senior architect from Afghanistan.

Kuala Lumpur airport sources said the jet was commandeered by Japanese Red Army terrorists. Malaysian Airlines officials said the plane radioed that the plane had been hijacked, but they said they could not confirm the identity number of hijackers.

S. Africa creates second state

MMABATHO, Bophuthatswana (AP) — With a 101-gun salute, the raising of a leopard head flag and the lighting of an independence flame, South Africa created a second black homeland state at midnight

Monday. A part of South Africa's system of racial segregation, the new state of Bophuthatswana received no recognition beyond that of South Africa and of its sister state, Transkei.

Since it was carved out of South African territory to be a home state for blacks a year ago, Transkei has been recognized as independent only by Johannesburg and ridiculed abroad as a puppet state unworthy of independent status.

Despite the foreign view, thousands of Tswanas gathered on the dusty plains surrounding Mmabatho to witness Bophuthatswana's independence ceremonies. A tent city for 12,000 was hastily erected for the bus-loads coming to town from the rural countryside.

Even Botswana, the former British protectorate which is Bophuthatswana's closest neighbor, has said it will not recognize an independent Bophuthatswana, although the two territories share a common origin, language and culture.

No foreign government representatives are expected at the three-day celebrations in Mmabotho, Bophuthatswana's capital, other than South Africa's President Nicolaas Diederichs, Foreign Minister R.F. Botha and Transkei's chief minister, Chief Kaiser Matanzima, accompanied by an official delegation of 11 Transkeians.

Thousands of coal miners on strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of the nation's coal miners went on strike Monday without waiting for the midnight expiration of their contract with the Bituminous Coal Operators' Association.

Industry negotiator Joseph P. Brennan said he would avoid "public posturing" as the negotiations continued, but added: "Obviously in this situation things are much more difficult."

But bargaining continued on a new contract, although United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller vowed the miners would "stick out" a strike "until we win it."

Morris Feibusch of the coal operators association said 28 of the approximately 1,800 miners operated by BCOA companies were closed Monday. Only a few of Ohio's 10,000 union members were on the job as scattered pickets turned back the few who wanted to work.

Most of the early walkouts occurred in West Virginia and Ohio. Kentucky mines reported full crews on the final shifts.

Dan Fields of the West Virginia Coal Association estimated 4,800 miners in that state got an early start on the strike, most of them in southern West Virginia. Other industry officials said 1,000 miners were off the job in the state's northern panhandle.

EMOTIONS HIGH AT MEETING College division debated

By JIM SMITH
State News Staff Writer
An occasionally bitter presentation last week by University College faculty revealed the wide range of emotion surrounding the Long-Range Planning Council's subcommittee proposal to disband University College.

The angry reaction has occurred before the proposal has even been approved by the entire council. A number of council members have expressed concerns similar to those presented Wednesday.

Roy T. Matthews, professor of humanities and one of University College's representatives to the planning council, said he believed the faculty meeting was probably necessary to demonstrate the wide range of feelings within the College to the council.

Another professor, who requested that his name not be used took a different view.

"The speeches only further point out the complete isolation of the University College faculty from the rest of the University," he said.

Should the Long-Range Planning Council approve the proposal, it would still have a long journey before being implemented. The proposal would have to go through the channels of Academic Governance before any formal action on dissolving University College could be taken by the MSU Board of Trustees.

Several questions have emerged from the Council discussions of the proposal.

The issue of the future of general education at MSU and the effect upon faculty have drawn diverse comments from both factions.

The proposal's supporters have argued that integration of the generalist faculty of University College with the specialist faculty of core colleges will enhance both groups. Advocates of the proposal have said they believe that through close proximity generalist faculty will gain an increased interest in specialized areas and general costs will broaden their viewpoints.

John F.A. Taylor, professor of philosophy, said at a recent meeting that the proposal does not adequately address the "schism" among University-wide faculty. The proposal's opponents, largely University College faculty, said they have done well so far in the area of general education without specialist interaction.

Jerry J. West, professor of American thought and language, argued that the proposal's veiled intent is the capture of resources by the core colleges.

West and other opponents said the mission of general education will be eroded by an eventual prolific use of graduate teaching assistants in general education courses.

The basic conflict between time spent developing teaching excellence versus research and publication is also at the heart of the debate.

University College faculty have said they fear that added pressure to "publish or perish" will erode their commitment to teaching.

The language used in proposal documents seems to have caused the most controversy. Statements that University College faculty are sometimes considered "second-class" teachers in comparison with core-college faculty and that University College is a teaching "ghetto" were focal points of three University College speakers.

Bishop N. Pipes Jr., professor of humanities, referred directly to this language when he said "If this be a ghetto (referring to University College) then you may have your Park Avenue."

Assistant professor of social science David Katz and West also referred to the language of the proposal's supporting documents.

On the issue of teaching excellence, proposal supporters have argued their plan would improve teaching excellence both the generalist and specialist sides, rather eroding it.

The cost-saving aspect of the proposal was dismissed when MSU Provost Clarence L. Winder said he saw no significance.

NEW TECHNIQUES TO BE STUDIED

Genetic research set

By PETE BRONSON
State News Staff Writer

Improved techniques of chromosome study and prediction of birth defects will soon be examined at MSU's Genetics Clinic but risks of such research are exaggerated, according to Dr. John Higgins.

Responding to recent criticism of genetic research by University of Minnesota geneticist Douglas Johnson, the MSU professor of Human Development and Zoology said, "Any area of study can be risky. We just have to learn to control our new technology."

The new techniques which the clinic will investigate were recently developed by another member of the University of Minnesota faculty, Dr. Jorge Yunis. Also a professor of genetics, laboratory medicine and pathology, Yunis claims he has been able to increase by five times the number of bands of genes which can be detected on human chromosomes.

If similar tests at the MSU clinic support Yunis' findings, Higgins said, researchers will have much more information upon which to predict such birth defects as retinoblastoma, a cancer which affects the eye. In addition, more will be learned about the arrangement of chromosomes.

"We don't know yet how precise the technique is," Higgins explained.

"If you string out the chromosomes too far, they end up looking like a bowl of spaghetti."

Higgins said MSU researchers can currently identify no more than 70 specific bands using conventional techniques. However, Yunis' method of studying the cells at an earlier stage of their multiplication cycle when their chromosomes are longer and thinner allows researchers to identify as many as 1500 bands, the Minnesota scientist said.

Higgins said that Johnson's comparisons of modern genetic research to Hitler's selective reproduction program of the 1930's are "off base."

"Our purpose is not to change people's reproductive habits, although we sometimes do indirectly. In most cases we don't change the process we only dispel fears," he explained.

By offering people genetic information, Higgins said parents can be allowed to make their decisions based on the facts. Genetic clinic counselors will assist but do not attempt to influence the decisions, he added.

"Many people have strong moral convictions about changes in reproductive standards. But we are a resource for information. To make a decision without information is living back in the dark ages," he commented.

Higgins said he agrees with Johnson that genetic research offers both "perils and promises," but pointed out the same is true in any area of study.

"Any new technology can be risky. Even a better ball bearing which makes wheels go faster can end up killing people. Dynamite is risky in the wrong hands, but it's controlled," he said.

Higgins agreed that the extent of risk in genetic research is currently unknown.

"Gene manipulation is so new and unpredictable, that we don't know what to safeguard against," he said.

But to Johnson's question, "How do you establish protective measures against the unknown?", Higgins replied, "Now is the time to study and find out."

Two pedestrians battle a lunch-hour snow storm in downtown Detroit Monday, the beginning of a predicted seven-to-ten inch snowfall for lower Michigan by Monday night.

Council meets tonight

Approval of a firm to study alternatives to improve Grand Avenue will be among the items on the agenda for tonight's East Lansing City Council meeting.

The council is expected to approve the firm of Villanov and Associates to do the study when it meets tonight at 7 p.m. in the conference room of the East Lansing City Library, 410 Abbott Rd.

The council agreed to hire the firm at a work session held last week. City manager Jerry Hagan suggested the firm at the council meeting last month, and the council deferred action upon hearing charges that the firm had a conflict of interest. The firm is being hired to give city officials ammunition to say why they want a plan for improvement to Grand River Avenue that the State Highway Department has already labeled "unacceptable."

The plan is one of four possibilities presented by the highway department in the initial study to improve the roadway. The department favors another plan that has been rejected by the City Council as a viable alternative.

Former planning commissioner Terry Liner made the conflict of interest charge when he appeared at a City Council meeting last month and told the council that the firm could not be unbiased since it also does work for the State Highway Department.

Coffman said at a recent work session that only five to 10 percent of the work done by the firm was for the State Highway Department and that it did not constitute a conflict of interest.

The council will also take up the subject of the problem residents have had with stray dogs. The council decided at a council meeting last month to curb the problem by posting "no dogs allowed" signs in city parks.

A public hearing on this action by the City Council will take place at the beginning of the meeting.

Foreign students to visit MSU, discuss problems

By JEANNE BARON
State News Staff Writer
Foreign students from nearly 20 countries will visit MSU in December to participate in the 24th Adventure in World Understanding program, to be offered Dec. 25 through 30, is being sponsored by the Community Center.

The local organization offers support to foreign students, faculty and short-term visitors. They will then meet in groups to discuss what they have learned, and how the information could be applied in their own countries.

Several of the participants will be government representatives from countries trying to develop educational programs, Woodward said. "Many are working on governmental programs or are special staff members, so they'll be here to study and get information to help their countries," she explained.

"I think they have a lot more goals than most American students do at this point in their lives." About one-half of the participants will be from African nations, and one-quarter from Asia, with the rest coming mostly from the Middle East. Only two conference members

Egypt's move hasty

The situation in the Mideast is changing and convulsing in ways that could never have been predicted as recently as a month ago.

On Monday, Egypt announced that it was breaking diplomatic relations with five Arab countries that had met at a summit to condemn the peace initiatives of Egyptian president Anwar Sadat.

All except Iraq signed a declaration asserting that Sadat's bid for re-approachment with Israel amounted to "high treason."

Iraq demurred, apparently feeling that summit participants were too reticent in their criticism of Sadat.

The move by Egypt is fraught with perils and, on balance, appears to have been ill-considered. The anti-Sadat summit stopped short of a total break with Egypt, thereby leaving open the possibility that, given the right circumstances, the rest of the Arab world could be persuaded to at least tacitly support Sadat's overall objectives.

By severing its relations with these nations, Egypt can only fuel speculation that it seeks to negotiate a separate peace with Israel. If any lasting and meaningful settlement is to be achieved in the Mideast, it will have to encompass at least some of the views of all the affected parties.

Egypt seems to have reacted hastily and in anger. Its dramatic break with its Arab neighbors should be reconsidered in a calmer, more sober atmosphere.

Tax relief for tuition bill flawed, unviable

A measure which would grant tax relief to parents footing the tuition bills for college students would seemingly be greeted by the middle class as a boon. Such a bill has, in fact, been introduced but is seriously flawed by the manner in which it would have to be implemented.

Apparently only a positive reaction was expected by state Rep. J. S. Mowat R-Adrian, when he introduced the bill in the House Higher Education Committee. The bill would allow for a 25 per cent tuition deduction not exceeding $800 for 1977, increasing to $1,000 in 1978 and $1,200 for subsequent years.

Obviously attuned to the growing discontent of the middle class, Mowat introduced the measure in what appears primarily to be an attention-getting ploy motivated by nothing more than political self-interest.

Rep. George Montgomery, the Detroit Democrat who chairs the House Committee on Taxation to which the measure has been referred, said he does not expect the bill to be moved from committee for a variety of reasons.

The most obvious flaw in the bill is that, if passed, vast amounts of revenue would be lost to the state. In order to recoup these monies, several courses of action are open. Appropriations to existing social programs could be cut, as Sen. Gary Corbin suggested recently when introducing a similar measure in a Senate committee. Other alternatives include raising nuisance taxes — on cigarettes or liquor, for example — or the personal income tax.

The way the political situation now stands, the only way the necessary funds could be replenished would be through slashing appropriations for other programs.

In Montgomery's own words, members of the legislature "would have to be a bunch of double-dip damned fools" to vote an income tax increase. The state sales tax, of course, is limited to the present 4 percent by state constitution.

A long-time veteran of legislative maneuvering, Montgomery believes that "nothing" will come of the Mowat measure.

There is a crying need for tuition assistance programs for the middle class. The state of New York's Tuition Assistance Program, funded by legislative appropriations, provides relief to middle-income families without shortchanging other groups in need of social service programs. That is one program conceived and executed in the public interest.

Solutions to the problem of burgeoning tuition costs must be found through governmental programs. The state legislature needs to come up with programs that not only offer such solutions, but can be viably implemented as well.

Dayton Hudson mall calls for referendum

People are generally cautious when it comes to signing their names — and rightly so.

It therefore comes as no surprise to learn that the petition now circulating in the East Lansing area concerning the construction of the controversial Dayton Hudson Mall isn't doing that well.

However, it seems many persons who have withheld signing the petition have done so not because they disagree with its content but because they misunderstand the meaning of the document.

By signing the petition, one is expressing neither support nor opposition to the Dayton Hudson project, but merely asking that the subject be put to public vote.

The deadline for the petitions is February and the three groups campaigning against the mall — Students for a Livable Community, MSU-Public Interest Research Group in Michigan and Citizens for a Livable Community — say they have well over half the needed signatures.

However, the legality of the petitions is in question and unless enough signatures are gained the question will never be answered. Conflicting rulings have been given in the past on whether a referendum to repeal a city's zoning is legal, and only if enough persons support the idea of a referendum will the Ingham County Circuit Court rule on the matter.

The proposed two-story, 100-store, climate-controlled mall in an area north of Lake Lansing Road seems inevitable to rise in the same spirit of other Dayton Hudson properties, like Genesee Valley in Flint, Twelve Oaks in Novi and the Lands of Detroit (Northland, Southland, Westland and Eastland).

But a referendum is one way — the only way — for the people of the area to say whether they want this mall or not.

But the issue is a complex one, and everyone should research it thoroughly before taking a stand. In the meantime, people should sign the petition, so their views can have some impact.

DOONESBURY

VIEWPOINT: ENERGY

Environmental issues important

By JAMES JABARA As I eagerly walked through the auditorium doors Wednesday night to add my energy-consuming mass to the energy crisis symposium, I was approached and confronted by a leaflet-laden young lady. She introduced herself as the opposition to this function and briefly discussed U.S. labor party attitudes about nuclear energy as our hope for solving the energy crisis. This seemed very healthy to me, seeking some counter-thought and the freedom of speech. Taking a handout and heading in the door, I knew little of future attitude changes that would take place in the next three hours.

As the evening progressed, an issue was raised that made me remember my trip through the front doors not long before. That is, what direction does the use of nuclear energy take mankind in general, as well as the United States? And if employed on a massive basis, what are the trade-offs?

According to Barry Commoner's very humanistic, ecologically-minded attitudes, a move toward a less energy-consuming society would be of survival benefit to man at this point. That is to say, more economic expansion would mean more energy demands, and this undoubtedly would end in more reliance on our quickly depleting non-renewable resources. Namely, oil, coal, and natural gas.

This trend toward economic boom, accomplished by low-interest government loans to business, would lead us to a yet unperfected and dangerous energy production process commonly known as nuclear fission and fusion.

But who is Barry Commoner? And what does he know?

At least this seems to be the attitude taken by the U.S. Labor Party as the outspoken members attempted to dissent, stumbling down the road of intelligent, orderly discussion, yelling, in effect, "fascist."

What position does the Labor party really take? And what does it propose as policy relating to energy consumption, production, distribution, and economic value?

On first encounter, the party seems to esteem economic growth and consumption. As we look beyond this initial concept, we view their secondary attitudes in favor of more industry, more labor, and more technology. This of course would mean higher energy production levels, economic increases do not in most cases mean a positive direction for environmental quality, especially when energy demands make us more dependent on non-renewable energy.

Though much has been done recently to reduce nuclear pollution, much is unknown about the dangerous material from reactors, as well as what to do with its by-products.

Tragedy of unknown magnitude is expected if this undertested material is employed without extensive monitoring and research. PBB would seem like a sleeping baby compared to a staggering nuclear giant plugging its mutation, cancer and death.

So it seems only logical that uninvolved political activists concerned entirely with economic development would call current humanistic environmentalism "fascist."

They do not realize the implicit environmental implications for which the responsibility cannot be held in the hands of private enterprise, as proven by examples.

Surely, to say that nuclear energy is useless and not an important alternative would be to distort and mistake the environmentalists are making. Research, much more experimentation and testing nuclear power production is needed before it is used extensively. In the meantime, expansion of research in the use of geothermal, hydro and wind as alternative power sources must be continued.

Essentially, environmental protection and quality by government control is a trade-off for traditional economic growth and private control.

P.S. Look before you leap. P.P.S. PBB.

Jabara is a senior majoring in natural resources and environmental education.

Letters

Sadat 'Messiah'

I am a Palestinian Arab, born and raised in this country. I would like to take an opportunity to respond to the monomaniacally one-sided letters attacking the PLO that have appeared in the State News in recent weeks.

First, to myself and millions of Palestinians a PLO member represents the ultimate freedom fighter — the lone crusader. He seeks not prestige or personal gain but puts his life on the line in pursuit of a "higher" cause — the repossession of his land. He refuses to submit — in effect, he is the ultimate Robin Hood.

Secondly, the PLO is a defensive response to an Israeli pathology. Jews have an inherently collective paranoia as to the security of their existence. This is understandable in light of World War II. What is not understandable is the psychological trap they (or should I say the Palestinians?) have fallen victim to. This is the world-renowned psychologist of terrorism, Dr. Frederick J. Hacker, describes as "identification with the aggressor." He states: "The Jews, having been subjected to the Nazi's genocidal fury, now inflict on the Palestinians what was inflicted on them; they, who had been expelled or had seen their innocent people killed, now expel and kill innocent people." (Frederick J. Hacker, Crusaders, Criminals, Crazyies - Terror and Terrorism in Our Time; p. 72.)

Sadat gambled his life and the prestige of his country. From Israel, he received nothing in return. Are the Palestinians the only ones who realize this? Sadat considered his trip to Israel a sacred mission. Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin agreed. Isn't it ironic, then, that after all these years, the Jewish people's long awaited Messiah turns out to be an Arab?

TV unsuited to art

In response to the Dec. 2 letter by Dennis Summers, I would like to say that I have in the past spent a great deal of energy despising television. I too have had my doubts about the "unintelligent masses." However, I have recently become convinced that television is a legitimate medium of the age, and that the intellectual who insists on applying literary standards to this new and different medium fails to see the immense service that television could perform for society. I have also come to realize that the thinking of human beings in terms of "unintelligent masses" is a snobbish, vindictive, and unenlightened attitude.

I am not defending current television programming. Much of it is trash. Some of it

Maynard Ferguson burns

By DAN HILBERT
State News Reviewer

Moving — always moving. Maynard Ferguson is a jazz trumpeter who is also a showman. On stage is his moment he goes onto it, and he uses every bit of it. He is constantly saturated with the music going on around him, whether he is playing, conducting or just listening.

He's not afraid to back himself up with the best in the business, and that courage and confidence made Sunday nights at Okemos High School Fine Arts Center a thundering success.

Ever since he found fame, years ago than he would admit, with the Stan

Kenton Band, Ferguson has been hailed as the king of the jazz trumpet players. His high pitched screech trumpet playing set the pace for many who would follow, notable Don Ellis and the late Bill Chase.

But he seems to have matured. His high-velocity trumpet playing is still there (and his hallmark), but it's mixed with a command of the low mellow trumpet range.

He plays with a confidence and ease that makes his greatest performance of all, because it is at once so dynamic and so relaxed.

Each of the three times I've seen his band in concert, its members have been different; but there is one aspect that hasn't changed — the sound. His trumpet line is superb. Stan Mark, Dennis Noday, Giuseppe Loon and Ron Tooley are each virtuoso performers in their own right. Ferguson has not avoided picking top players to back him up and he hasn't buried them in the back row. They shine with the luminousness of an early Kenton-esque Ferguson.

This was demonstrated during the performance of "Conquistador" from his most popular album of the same name. That song provided the vehicle for a solo performance from Ferguson, and then each member of his trumpet section. As they approached the microphone, raised their horns to face the packed house, the sound exploded. Listening to this, one can only stop and think, "they're as good as he is," as perhaps they are. But when Maynard next approached the mike, begins his short licks that lead him into the stratosphere — we know they can't be.

He began the concert with "Give It One" from his M.F. Horn II LP from the early 70s, the sequel to M.F. Horn I, which marked his return to the music scene after a hiatus in India. He performed this song at a tempo twice that of the recorded version, and the result was volatile. He had the crowd lingering on every note from the beginning of the night, and they stayed there until the end.

His version of "Gonna Fly Now" from the film Rocky, exemplifies the power and high pitched soaring which characterizes this band. The song comes alive with vitality, the meaning of that film, which is a quality that is lacking in the version of the song.

Sunday night, his band performed this song with the Okemos High School Jazz Ensemble, which provided a prologue to Ferguson's concert; and the result was a mixture of the old and the new, professional and amateur.

Jazz trumpeter Maynard Ferguson brought his band and his own brand of explosive modern jazz to the Okemos High School Fine Arts Center Sunday night.

Flack kills softly with song

By KAT BROWN
State News Reviewer

"Reverend Lee — do it, do it to me..."

Well, Roberta Flack definitely did it to the 2,800 people who jammed into Long's Banquet Center Sunday for two sold-out shows.

Harry Whitaker, Flack's music director, gave her a brief respite from the piano as he played an original composition "Funky Ragtime." Flack and the band devoted themselves to the instrumentation of the piece — making it the only song where the lyrics were secondary to the music.

Flack's music excellence — begun at an early age on the piano and further polished with a degree from Howard University — continues to improve. Her stage presence is powerful. She wore her usual black flowing gown, which always moves so well with her own facial expressions and gestures. She is an actress, playing the part of each song's subject.

The audience adored her. Unfortunately, Long's Banquet Center is not the most desirable setup for a concert. To experience a sower of songs such as Flack, one must have a seat right in front. But with a capacity of 1,400, it is implausible. Flack had the foresight to request that drinks not be served during her performance. With so many heads to peer over to see her, it would have been outrageous to be forced to deal with dozens of waiters and waitresses taking orders to quench the viewers' thirst — Roberta Flack did that without needing any help.

Roberta Flack sang to two sellout crowds Sunday at Long's of Lansing.

Cheap Trick turns a treat and delights small audience

By DAVE DIMARTINO
State News Reviewer

Though few seats in the Michigan Theater were occupied at Cheap Trick's performance Sunday night, the small crowd in attendance was no less enthusiastic.

It might be argued that the $6.50 price tag was a bit steep for the band, particularly considering that they have yet to break the singles market. While this criticism is valid at this point, it won't be for long. As demonstrated in concert, Cheap Trick not only has the resources to produce hit after hit; they are capable of becoming one of the biggest, most enjoyable bands in the country.

Cheap Trick has three points very much in their favor: their "unusual" stage manner, their very excellent songwriting skills, and, perhaps most importantly, their ability to deliver much more than they seem to promise.

Guitarist Rick Nielson completely dominated the proceedings Sunday night. Most appropriate, certainly, for Nielson is the band's focal point in every sense. He composes the majority of the band's material, he plays delightfully frenetic lead guitar, and obviously, he is the most outlandish stage performer of the bunch. Nielson, a Huntz Hall look-a-like who has to be seen to be believed, shares with drummer Bun E. Carlos the distinction of being the most unlikely rock hero since Pete Townshend.

Nielson's songs, all of them consistently excellent, are uniquely suited to be played loudly. The combination of volume and melody recalls the spirit of the Move's "Do Ya," a classic tune that Cheap Trick seems easily capable of approaching.

With the incorporation of Terry Reid's "Speak Now or Forever Hold Your Peace" and Dylan's "Please Mrs. Henry" into the band's live set, Nielson shows a taste and awareness of his contemporaries that complements his own writing skill.

Thus, spitting guitar picks bearing his name out into the audience, Nielson power-chorded his way into the hearts of an already frantic audience. While most of the night's material was taken from the group's newest LP, Cheap Trick Live and In Color, it seemed that those tunes from the group's first LP drew the most enthusiastic reception. That LP, while containing songs generally as good as those on the new album, is the stronger of the two, solely because of the production quality, which approaches the group's live sound. Newer material came across much more powerfully in the life setting — a sign that the band could use a better producer than the one used on In Color.

Encores were no problem. A Cheap Trick fan club of sorts apparently follows the band around whenever they play Michigan concerts, and were present and extremely vocal Sunday night. Combined with a raving crowd almost standing on their theater seats, the band's reception was little short of phenomenal, considering the limited numbers in the audience.

Ultimately, it's only a matter of time before the band will be selling out shows at a $6.50 asking price. They have the potential to be a really big band — in some ways they already are — and should, with luck, break out nationally with their next LP.

LABORATORY CLASS SERVES 50 GUESTS

Restaurant students prepare cuisine

By STEVE SCHMIEDER

Strawberry soup . . . pineapple-tomato vinaigrette . . . lemon "Shiver" . . . grasshopper pie . . . shortbread cookies . . .

It would be a waste of time to comb the streets of East Lansing looking for these culinary delights. The student-produced menus can be found only at the twice-weekly Hotel, Restaurant and Institutional management dinners at Kellogg Center.

At the end of a long, carpeted corridor in the Kellogg Center basement, students can be seen converting the cafeteria into a makeshift dining room. Light blue tablecloths are laid across circular tables and three silver forks are placed next to each plate. A wicker-like screen is raised to separate the tables from the cafeteria serving line.

These students are enrolled in an HRI food production class. Laboratory hours are spent in the kitchen preparing cuisine which is served to some 50 guests every Tuesday and Thursday.

Tickets are sold by the HRI students to guests for $3.00 each and are not available anywhere else.

Instructor Donald A. Bell started the class in the summer of 1970 as an experiment. Increasing enrollment proved its success and has led Bell to teach the class every term for the last four years.

Bell said he doesn't mind teaching the course every term because each class and every dinner turn out differently.

"Each class tries to outdo one another," Bell commented. "Some dinners are real Hollywood extravaganzas."

Bell said his role in the kitchen is mainly as a supervisor and a resource for the students. He approves everything the students plan and helps with recipe changes.

The 50 students in the class are divided into 10 groups, with each group being responsible for a dinner project. They must develop the theme and the menu; research and test their recipes; order food, supplies and equipment; plan a production and service schedule; sell tickets; set-up and serve the meal; and report a profit/loss statement.

HRI 435 is one of only two courses offered where students actually work with food. The class is required for HRI majors in their senior year so that they can utilize their knowledge from past courses in a practical situation.

The dinners are designed to let groups experience what it would be like to run a restaurant for one night. Naturally, each group wants to out-do the others.

"It's very competitive," said senior Craig Humphrey. "Each group is seeing who can be the most creative."

Menus vary with each meal. Previous entrees have included roast wild boar and veal cordon bleu. Usually the feast consists of six to eight courses, each expressing its own special flavor and uniqueness.

The students are limited only by their imaginations when preparing dinners. Graduate assistant Ron Cichy said he remembers when a 23-foot sailing yacht was used in Kellogg Center's parking lot last year to serve drinks from before dinner.

As in every learning experience, mistakes do happen. The coordination between the preparation of the food and serving it is often delicate. Timing and planning every step is an essential part of the program.

Weeks before the actual meal, students select a theme and put together a menu. A small test dinner is held one week before the actual dinner. "Test results" may cause a menu item to be cancelled, a recipe to be modified or a cooking procedure to be altered.

One day before the dinner is served, all food items which can be held overnight are prepared. The preparation takes about four hours and usually includes the cleaning and cutting of vegetables and making the dips.

Bell said that he receives "highly positive feedback" from the customers and that they like to be invited back.

"It's the best restaurant in town," one diner remarked to Bell. "I wouldn't argue with that," Bell answered, smiling.

HRI majors attend to every aspect of a formal banquet at Kellogg Center — from the preparing of the main dish to providing the decorations.

THE POST GRADUATE SYSTEM

More power and more bass for a little more money. That's the POST GRADUATE SYSTEM. At the center of the system is the Kenwood 4070 AM-FM stereo receiver. The 4070 is sensitive enough to pull in even weak, distant FM stations and has an overload handling ability to block distortions from strong signals in high-powered FM station areas. But power is what the Kenwood 4070 does best. It will deliver a generous amount of clean power for sustained high volume levels over the entire audible spectrum. The Genesis 2 Loudspeaker, the big brother of the Genesis 1 has had a passive radiator added to the two-way acoustic suspension format for the best bass response we've heard from a bookshelf speaker. Rounding out the system is the JVC JL-F30 turntable with the Ortofon F15E cartridge. The JL-F30 features fully automatic lead-in/ repeat/ return and shut-off. Its 4 pole synchronous motor insure constant speed at all times. The Ortofon F15E cartridge delivers crystal clear response over the entire frequency range. The POST GRADUATE SYSTEM is certainly worthy of a masters degree in quality and performance.

Heathcote pleased so far

With all the talent on the MSU basketball team, there was considerable doubt in the pre-season whether the players would be able to mold together into a successful team. After three games the Spartans' record stands at 2-1 and they are looking for an impressive second-place finish in the Carrier Classic in Syracuse, N.Y.

Johnson was the most valuable player in the Carrier Classic and he leads the team in assists (eight per game) and rebounding (6.3 per game)."

Bob Chapman — "Bob had a very good tournament and his shooting Friday night (11 of 11 from the floor) was excellent. He has been getting into foul trouble, and that hurts us. As the season progresses he won't pick as many offensive fouls." Chapman leads the team in scoring with a 17-point average and he scored 30 points in Friday's 92-64 win over Rhode Island. He is hitting 53 percent from the floor, and 86 percent from the line. Gregory Kelsner — "Gregory got into foul trouble against Syracuse so he wasn't very productive. But Greg will have games like that. He has played well in the other two games, scoring 18 and 24 points."

Kelsner is hitting 64 percent of his shots from the floor, but he is shooting a dismal 44 percent from the line.

Jay Vincent: "If Jay improves defensively, the center job is his. Jay tends to think he is playing better defense than he actually is. But I have confidence in him and he can take the ball to the basket against anyone in college basketball."

Vincent has shown some impressive shooting this year, hitting 67 percent from the floor and 91 percent from the line.

Terry Donnelly: "Terry isn't asserting himself offensively as well as we need him to do. He's a good shooter, but he's too content to take more of a secondary role, offensively. He has been playing good defense."

Heathcote also said Ron Charles may see more playing time and Mike Brkovich is emerging as the team's third guard over Lenny Williams.

Dallas Cowboy rookie and Heisman Trophy winner Tony Dorsett pulls away from Philadelphia defenders for an 84-yard touchdown run, the longest in the NFL this year. Dorsett also rushed for 206 yards in the Cowboys' 24-14 win Sunday that clinched a playoff spot for the 11th time in 12 years.

MSU in tune for opener

By JOHN SINGLER
State News Sports Writer

There was nothing really new about MSU men's gymnast George Szygula last weekend's Ball State National for all-arounders. Szygula said that he doesn't know more about his team than before the meet.

"The performance on optionals (Saturday) was six points better than what we scored in this meet last year," Szygula said. "It's early and I hope we can get going now."

Gibbs and Craig MacLean each hit an 8.70 optional vault and Rudolph added an 8.40. "Jeff didn't work floor exercise at all, so we were hurting in that event," Szygula said. The New York senior is nursing a tender ankle and experienced more problems on the parallel bars and pommel horse, in the latter being one of his most steady events. He turned in a "real good" effort in his compulsory routine on the parallel bars, an 8.60.

Gibbs, a superb freshman gymnast from Charlotte, N.C., averaged 8.00 for the six optional events and nailed an 8.90 compulsory vault. MacLean's optional floor routine was, in Szygula's words, "steady" and Sturrock bailed MSU out on the high bar, parallel bars and in the floor exercise.

The dual meet season consists of optional routines, with an occasional set of compulsories mixed in. The most outstanding gap Szygula has to fill is in the Spartans' compulsories, which come up again at the Big Ten Invitational in Ann Arbor Jan. 13 and 14.

Both the MSU men's and women's team travel to State College, Pa., for the next dual meet, against Penn State Dec. 16.

Matmen fourth at invitational

By GAYLE JACOBSON
State News Sports Writer

The MSU matmen were at Penn State over the weekend for a nine-team match-up and came away from it with a fourth-place finish on Saturday.

Spartan grapplers totaled 83 points to earn the respectable fourth-place finish. Lehigh topped the scoring with 109 points, Penn State with 107 points held the runner-up position, and Clarion, the third-place finisher, had 83.1/3 points.

MSU wrestling coach Grady Peninger wasn't too displeased with his squad's achievements. "We were fourth," he said. "But we only lost third place by 1/3 of a point. We should have been third... Jeff Thomas (wrestling in the 126-pound weight class) got upset and that killed our chances right there."

Thomas wound up taking a fifth-place finish in the tournament action, a slight disappointment after his two previous individual victories at the MSU Invitational and the dual with Michigan.

For the Spartans, there were two superb individual performances coming from grapplers Dennis Brighton in the 150-pound weight class, and Jim Ellis in the 167-pound weight class. Both won all three of their matches for a couple of first-place finishes. This extends their own individual winning streak to three victories apiece.

Runner-up spots went to previously unbeaten Don Rodgers in the 142-pound weight class and Mike Walsh in the 134-pound weight class. Both took second-place honors by winning two out of the three matches they competed in.

As coach Peninger had anticipated, the tournament was a tough one, and the competition was indeed a challenge to this year's much-improved team.

"It was a very tough tournament," said Peninger. "We did well. It was really a super experience."

The Spartans will remain idle this week, spending some time preparing for dual meets in Burnt Hill, New York, December 17. MSU will have match-ups with Brockport College and Syracuse. Syracuse was also a part of the tournament action this past weekend, finishing eighth out of a nine-team field.

Newspapers collected near stadium for Community Radio Watch's drive

The MSU branch of the Community Radio Watch (CRW) is sponsoring a newspaper drive this week to raise funds for their non-profit organization.

Newspapers and magazines will be there to collect the papers from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Friday.

Money raised from the newspaper drive will pay for CB radios, phone bills and general operating costs of the MSU branch of the CRW.

The CRW was formed about two years ago to aid police in search and rescue procedures, and traffic control.

Foreign students to participate in community program

"This area of sharing and contributing to knowledge in the community could be developed more," Woodward said.

"It's important as a community volunteer, I think, to have more a positive relationship between the community and the University."

During the holiday season, the volunteers try to find families to invite foreign students to visit for a few days.

"Foreign students, especially new ones, are lonely and need contact. They need someone to call in an emergency," she said. "It's hard to come to a large school like this when you don't understand the language or culture."

Woodward said the volunteers number about 400, including host families. The Office of International Studies and Programs supplies the organization with an office, telephone and general supplies, but funding for the group comes from the community.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, on a six-day visit to London, told Jewish leaders that Egypt and Israel "shall talk to each other and we shall find a solution." In an interview in London that was televised in Tel Aviv, Begin said he welcomed Sadat's visit to the Mideast, and he will conduct serious talks, he said.

Begin held weekend talks with Prime Minister James Callaghan and Callaghan flew to Brussels Monday where he presided over a summit meeting of the European Common Market. Aides said Callaghan and the other heads of state and Sadat were resolved to pursue their initiative and to seek a comprehensive settlement rather than a separate Israeli-Egyptian agreement.

Begin said his country for a visit to Libya, where he said he would discuss the Middle East situation with Libyan leaders. Libya has had close ties with Israel for several years.

The outcome of the five-day gathering here was a clear victory for Syria's Assad, the dour former jet pilot who has steered his country toward increasingly moderate policies since the 1973 Middle East war.

The conference declaration, signed in the main room of Libya's marble-walled People's Palace, condemned Sadat's peace overtures to Israel as "high treason" against the Arab people, and it urged the Arab world to provide aid to Syria as "the main confrontation state and the main base of resistance confronting the enemy."

The new front also said it would "freeze" diplomatic relations with Egypt and boycott Egyptian individuals and enterprises dealing with Israel. There was no elaboration on what the freeze meant, leaving the impression it meant little. The boycott seemed to be more a warning than a real boycott, since no Egyptian firms publicly deal with Israel.

The signatories said they would contact other Arab League members about Egypt's membership and about moving league headquarters out of Cairo. They also pledged that aggression against one member of the front would be considered aggression against them all.

After staging the walkout, Iraq's chief delegate to the conference, Taha Yasin Ramadan Gezrawi, told reporters: "Assad still believes that peaceful and capitulatory solutions and negotiations are the correct path."

Iraq had insisted on — and Assad refused — rejection of U.N. resolutions 242 and 338, the basis for American-led efforts to revive Geneva peace talks on the Middle East.

For married students, the group tries to organize English conversation and friendship groups, she continued.

The organization has scholarships available for wives to receive tuition money for three credits at MSU.

"The scholarships are very small, but at least the wife can get some outside contact if she wants to," Woodward said.

Additionally, the volunteers have a lending center for students in University Apartments, to provide items families might need.

"We can provide lamps, dishes, silverware, pots and pans, baby cribs, blankets and pillows," she said. "The items are donated by people in the Greater Lansing area."

The volunteers help set up lectures and presentations on certain countries for area schools, she said.

Gene study coming to 'U'

Opponents said the University could eventually save money through eliminating positions by replacing tenured faculty with teaching assistants. Such a move would erode the concept behind general education, University College faculty members have said.

Supporters of the proposal said the retention of all tenured faculty positions is called for in the plan. Some temporary positions could eventually be eliminated, without harm to general education they have said.

The issues are complex with equally complex solutions. Nearly everyone involved agreed there is a "schism," among University faculty which needs examination.

The matter of the future of general education is a highly emotional one, as evidenced at last Wednesday's meeting, and one which will probably be debated for some time to come.

Drug causes cancer in rats operating in the highlands or western I Corps were told to take a smaller, white pill every day in addition to the weekly tablet promoted on Armed Forces Radio as "The Pill."

It was the smaller, white pill that contained dapsone. The drug distributed by the military was trade-named Aviosulfon and was marketed by Ayerst Laboratories.

Dapsone is a parent chemical of several so-called sulfone drugs used in the treatment of leprosy, an infectious, incurable disease that causes disfigurement, blindness and, indirectly, death.

The development of dapsone in the early 1940s revolutionized the treatment of the disease that had been dreaded throughout the world for centuries and treated primarily by isolating its victims in colonies for life.

With regular use, dapsone and other sulfone drugs halted the infectious nature of the disease and, in time, reversed its spread over the body.

U.N. OFFICIAL SPEAKS OUT Energy experts meet

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Developing alternate energy sources is essential to discourage the "Faustian bargain" of nuclear proliferation that could lead to a "nuclear nightmare," a high-ranking United Nations official said Monday.

at all risks — consider that safeguards and treaties may delay proliferation, but in the long run it is inevitable," said Dr. I.H. Usmani, senior energy adviser to the United Nations Environment Program.

Usmani told nearly 1,000 energy experts representing universities, industries and governments at the Miami International Conference on Alternative Energy Sources that the "Faustian bargain" of learning to live with the possibility of nuclear disaster in return for an almost unlimited supply of electricity is "horrendous, and, I believe, society will never accept it as a whole."

Usmani's main objection was to plutonium, which can be separated from the waste products of some nuclear reactors and used as additional fuel. But it also can be used to fashion a relatively simple nuclear weapon.

Nuclear industry officials maintain that security systems can be devised to keep plutonium out of the hands of terrorists, and that the U.N. can make certain that weapons-grade material does not spread from country to country.

But Usmani, who has been with the U.N. since 1974, said the belief that the organization can monitor all nuclear plants in the world is "one of the great myths of our times."

And he added that supplies of uranium — the only nuclear fuel other than plutonium — will last for only 30 years to 50 years.

"The spell of 30 to 50 years, in my opinion, is sufficient for us to discover alternative sources of energy and new technologies which would end the nuclear nightmare," Usmani said.

Energy experts from more than 40 nations are attending the three-day conference, which is sponsored by the U.S. Department of Energy and the University of Miami.

Jazzman Roland Kirk dies after performance

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. AP — Famed jazz musician Rahsaan Roland Kirk, blind from birth and nearly immobile since he suffered a serious stroke in 1975, died Monday at Bloomington Hospital, just hours after his last concert. He was 41.

Since the stroke, Kirk had been restricted to a chair and had to be helped on and off the stage.

He played a variety of instruments, including the flute, saxophone and harmonica, and was famous partly because he could play two or more of them at once. He would often take a stage with two or three saxophones and a flute hung around his neck.

Kirk began playing at jazz clubs in his native Columbus, Ohio. At age 15 he was traveling the state with bands. He said that when he was 16 he dreamed of playing three instruments at once. The next day he went to a music store, tried all the reed instruments and bought a manzello and a stritch, two obscure members of the saxophone family. Eventually he developed a way to play three-part harmony by himself, using tricky fingering.

Kirk recorded his first album in 1956.

He wrote and usually played avant-garde jazz, but would also play more popular music.

OF BERKOWITZ DIARIES Post prints excerpts

NEW YORK (AP) — David Berkowitz, charged with being the "Son of Sam" killer, has totally withdrawn from reality, The New York Post reported Monday.

But in diaries written during the past four months in his isolation cell at Kings County Hospital, the Post said, Berkowitz admitted he is "addicted to killing."

The Post got copies of the handwritten diaries and printed excerpts along with pictures taken inside the prison ward of the hospital.

"Now that I am imprisoned I am quite content," Berkowitz wrote. "I feel that Sam has lost some of his hold on me and I also see Sam cannot use me as a tool for destruction."

"I remember when the police placed handcuffs on me. It was then that I had my first taste of freedom, yes, freedom. I was happy, real happy. In fact, I found myself smiling and laughing all day long."

In captivity, he has settled into a routine of sleeping and writing, the Post said. He does not seek conversation, does not want visitors and asks only for a steady supply of paper and pencils.

The newspaper said his writing is in a strong, free hand. It said it was clear that he wants to remain locked away for life and that he fears a return of his demons.

"If a fortune teller were to have forecast back in 1973 that me was going to become a homicidal maniac, killing people, I would not have believed her . . ."

"I guess I am addicted to killing since Sam has me working like a clock at regular intervals. I just hope that people can see my torment and lock me away some place and throw away the key so that I become a useless tool for Sam."

In some entries, he discusses the families of his victims and says that sometimes he feels Sam may want him to kill a family member.

"It certainly is true about families of the victims living in torment," he wrote. "However, no one was more tormented than me. By that I mean even before the shootings began."

"I will gladly show anybody how much I tried to avoid it all before it began. I fought the demons with all my strength, tried to put an end to their rotten existence yet I've met with failure."

At one point in the diary he wrote: "I am very tense now because I can feel the power of Sam descending on me. . . . I don't want to hurt anyone, but I will for Sam."

"I think Sam wants me to kill someone. Perhaps one of the victim's family. Father, if you want me to be of service to you it will be a privilege to rip someone's head off."
