BUSINESS ACCREDITATION UNSURE

School faced with probtion

By PATRICIA LECHEN

State News Staff Writer

The University of Michigan, which has asked for and received accreditation of its business college this year, was granted the status of "Subject to Probation" by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business at its winter meeting last week. The reason: the university has not completed a five-year review of the business college to determine whether it meets AAAS standards.

In the meantime, accredited schools must "sponsor" the college and check its progress regularly. Michigan's "sponsor" is the administration of the college of business administration.

The Probation status will allow the college to continue its educational programs. But it also means that the University of Michigan must report to the Business Accreditation Committee every six months on its progress in meeting the standards.

The next meeting of the Business Accreditation Committee will be held in March and the committee will review the progress of the University of Michigan's business college in that time.

Sino bids E. Lansing ‘adios’

The East Lansing Daily Press, 1975 winner of the Pulitzer prize and widely syndicated columnist, sent 2000 templates to the Michigan Daily recently, in an effort to win back the Muskegon Press. The Daily, which has a circulation of 10,000, is a daily newspaper printed in Detroit. The templates contained a letter to the editor of the Michigan Daily, stating that the Daily should be "adios."

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government on Wednesday ordered Automotive Machine Corporation to recall 237 heart pumps that may have contained counterfeit replacement parts that could cause the devices to fail. A troublesome free press debate

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

Words written almost 200 years ago, they articulate a commitment to the free expression of ideas. Today, as the world is freer and more open, the same language is being challenged. A recent case in Massachusetts, now under review by the U.S. Supreme Court, Massachusetts v. Sheehan, may prove a turning point in the battle for the "freedoms of speech and of the press." It is a case with special significance because it illuminates the issues and the problems involved in this most controversial of all issues of free speech.

A law passed in 1957, intended to prevent libel, granted the district attorney the power to demand of a newspaper that it erase from circulation an article that was found to be libelous. The law was aimed at newspapers that were publishing material that might incite violence or racketeering. Under it, the district attorney was empowered to order a newspaper to remove an article from circulation or to be held in contempt of court.

A lawyer, an author and a professor have written an article critical of the Pennsylvania State University. The attorney has written that the university is guilty of abuse of power, corruption and criminal negligence. The university president has asked the newspaper to remove the article or go to court and be held in contempt of court.

The case raises the question of whether a state has the right to censor newspaper articles written about it. The state has argued that it is necessary to prevent the publication of articles that might incite violence or racketeering. The attorney has argued that the law is unconstitutional because it restricts freedom of speech.

The case is important because it involves the free press and freedom of speech. One of the main arguments in favor of freedom of speech is that it is necessary for a free and democratic society. The court must decide whether the state has the right to censor newspapers.

The court was right to listen. There is no merit in the argument that the power of corporations to spread news or to communicate their own views should be curtailed. The court should also listen to the arguments that the state has an interest in preventing the publication of articles that might incite violence or racketeering. ABC’s ‘20-20’ goes ‘60 Minutes’ route

NEW YORK (AP) -- ABC’s weekly newsmagazine program, “20-20,” does more than provide an audience for its in-depth look at television’s offerings and other fields of broadcasting -- it will join the airwaves on a new channel.

Though ABC has never reached the heights of "60 Minutes," the network plans to beef up its evening show by expanding its regular series and adding a new, special series. The network's goal is to make "20-20" the "60 Minutes" of the microwave age.

The new series, "20-20," which will follow "60 Minutes," will feature "dark and exotic stories," said ABC's executive producer, Lee Attenborough.

"The show will be a mix of newsmagazine and in-depth reporting, similar to "60 Minutes,"" Attenborough said. "We hope to bring a new perspective to the evening news."

The Spartans' annual sports banquet got under way this week when W. M. Smith, director of intercollegiate athletics, addressed the athletes present.

The appeal, which was handed out on the second floor of the Sparta Hall, was accompanied by the donation of an additional $1,000 to the MSU athletic fund.

One of the athletes' favorite pastimes is the annual sports banquet, which is usually held in early June.

The evening was sponsored by the MSU athletic fund, which includes contributions from alumni, students, and other interested individuals.

In addition to the banquet, various activities are scheduled for the weekend, including a football game.

When the banquet is over, the athletes are free to enjoy the activities scheduled for the weekend, including a football game.

Brammer, a member of the MSU football team, has been reported as being in excellent physical condition for the upcoming season.

"He's got more confidence in his ability, and he's ready to step up and play," said coach Bob Bowman.

Brammer is expected to be one of the team's leaders this year, and his presence will be a boost to the team's morale.

The Spartans are looking forward to the season, and Brammer is a key component of their plans for success.

However, Brammer's injury is not serious, and he is expected to return to the team soon.

"We're excited about having him back," said coach Bowman.

Brammer is expected to make a full recovery and return to the field in time for the start of the season.

The Spartans have high hopes for the upcoming season, and Brammer's presence will be a major boost to their chances of success.
Flanagan leads improved laxers with record-breaking campaign

By JERRY BRACH

When MSU's second-year coach Kevin Flanagan broke his arm in a fall from the roof of a car, there was fear in the Spartan's locker room that it was going to be a long season for the Spartans between the lines.

"It was a bad break," Flanagan said. "It was a bad situation and we were worried about how we were going to handle the season without a head coach." But they handled it well and Flanagan is scheduled to return to the College of Veterinary Medicine in the fall.

He was worried about everything — the team's chemistry, the players' morale, the games, the opponents, the season. But his return has restored the team's confidence. They are now ready to take on whatever comes their way.

"He's been huge for us," said senior forward Craig Stahl. "He's always been there for us, giving us advice, helping us with our games. He's been a huge part of our success this year."

Salmon planted in river

By JANET HALFMANN

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources has planned the planting of 150,000 chinook salmon fry in the Grand River at Lansing's Bay-View Dam today at noon. The planting and return in two weeks of 1980. The plants will average 20 pounds.

The fry planted in the lower Grand River will not come back but they have been exposed to water conditions in Lansing area rivers, which the Michigan Department of Natural Resources will be monitored on the Grand River. The fry are the star of the planting event. Scott said.

They enable the fry to jump from pool to pool over the dams. The ladder to be constructed in Unaing may be the pool and weir type which would allow people to see the fish jump in the ladder. Scott said.

Lansing City Commissioner William A. Hrenke said one of the major advantages of "transporting the fish to the fishermen" would be the energy savings.

The Grand River salmon plan would also result in a $10 million economic gain for the regional area through increased tourism, sporting equipment sales and restaurant business, he said.

By 1981, coho salmon and steelhead should also be frequenting area rivers if the ladders are constructed on schedule.

Abrams offers sky info phone

Abrams Planetarium has installed a 24-hour telephone service to give current sky information to amateur astronomers.

The service, which was installed last week, provides a 24-hour answer phone giving nightly sightings of the moon and planets. The answering machine replaces the person who worked on the telephone service until it was installed.

The phone number for current sky information is 332-STAR.

The idea for the telephone line came from a graduate student at Michigan State University who worked in the planetarium last summer.

Position of planets, bright stars, northern lights, the moon and even the sky itself will be given.

Current sky information will be in the morning and early morning skies over mid-Michigan.
