Grievance rules unresolved

By MICHIELE CHAMBER

President Hyman announced that a permanent Faculty Grievance Procedure will be established during the coming year. The new procedure will replace the informal procedure which has been in effect for several years. The new procedure will be developed by the Faculty Grievance Committee and will be presented to the Faculty Senate at its first meeting of the fall semester.

On May 19, the Faculty Senate will be asked to approve the new procedure. If approved, it will become effective immediately.

The new procedure will provide for the following:

1. A formal Grievance Committee will be established.
2. A written statement of the grievance will be submitted to the committee.
3. The committee will investigate the complaint and, if necessary, will recommend action to be taken.
4. The procedure will be confidential.

The new procedure is being developed by the Faculty Grievance Committee, which was appointed last fall. The committee is composed of representatives from each of the four divisions of the university.

City plan for future gets unique critique at informal hearing

By BRIAN BARBAR

The city's comprehensive plan, which is designed to provide a framework for future development, is being criticized by a group of residents.

The group, called "The City Planners' Association," held an informal hearing last week to discuss the plan. The group consists of architects, planners, and other professionals who have been involved in the preparation of the plan.

The group's critique of the plan focused on several issues, including:

1. The lack of attention to economic development.
2. The omission of certain areas from the plan.
3. The insufficient consideration of environmental issues.

The group's critique was presented to the city council, which is expected to make a decision on the plan later this month.

The sale of a fleet of advanced F-15s (above) to Saudi Arabia has provoked intense controversy and dissatisfaction with the U.S. government. Editorial director, Jimm Carter, and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. We agree with Carter, and the 55 U.S. Senators who endorsed the agreement. The sale of these jets to Saudi Arabia will have long-term benefits that outweigh potential short-term debts.

Selling jets as a risk for peace

The Senate Monday handed Jimmy Carter a big victory. It voted 54-48 not to interfere with the sale of jet fighters to three nations in the Mideast—Israel, Saudi Arabia and Egypt. Egypt will receive 30 F-15s, while Saudi Arabia will get 40 of the more advanced F-16s, and five F-15s and five F-16s will go to Israel. To sweeten the pot, and make passage of the arms package more palatable to the Senate, Carter agreed to sell Israel another 20 F-15s, to be delivered in 1983-84.

Unguarded through the thicket of numbers, the crux of the matter, we believe, is this: for the first time the United States will sell advanced fighter planes to Saudi Arabia. The sale, as its opponents contend, designed to underwrite Israeli and recoup Saudi Arabia for its decision not to raise world oil prices. It is designed to bolster the hardening position of moderate Arabs in the swinging Mideast dispute. Indeed, the possibility that Saudi Arabia will be a Rambo arms suppliers, enhances the credibility of the United States as an imperial agent of Middle Affairs, it is important that the credibility of Jimmy Carter's diplomatic success around the world, and, perhaps most importantly, assert the possibility that Egyptian President Anwar Sadat will resign because the peace initiative launched 6 months ago is today floundering badly.

That is an exhausting list. It is a list which, we believe, disprove the notion that the debts of the arms sale weigh against its benefits.

Unfortunately, the diplomatic reaction would have been predictable. Carter, who promised Saudi Arabia delivery of the jets, would have looked foolish and inept. Israel, detecting support from the U.S. Senate and, by extension, the American people, would have been cataclysmic. Carter, who promised Saudi Arabia delivery of the notional that the debits of the arms sale outweigh its benefits.

Today foundering badly.

A settlement acceptable to all parties.

Carter in diplomatic chambers around the world, and, perhaps most as arms suppliers, enhance the credibility of the United States as an

The newspaper’s I’ve been reading haven’t really reported whether Italy is experiencing a rising crest of “low and order,” neo-fascist-type sentiment. But the survival of Italian democracy hinges on how much rightist sentiment is rising and the government’s ability to hold fast against the terrorists.

In conclusion, I would like to point out that women’s athletics has been going on for a number of years. How can you expect to do less than 15 years, what looks even easier initially, 10 years to achieve - a superior program of athletics? Just because an event is identified as Title IX even if the officials adhere strictly to deadlines for decision and ultimatum.

The experiment could spread elsewhere. It would be a step in the right direction if the United States would take better care of its women’s athletics program.

Women's athletics are falling behind in MSU, but it's through no fault of the women's programs.

In the early days of women's athletics at MSU, women's basketball was introduced in 1964 as a sport to be played under the aegis of the American Basketball Association. The women's basketball team played its first game on February 14, 1964, against the University of Michigan. The game was played at the Indiana State University Fieldhouse in Terre Haute, Indiana. The women's team was coached by Nellie Darragh, who had previously coached at the University of Iowa.

Women's basketball has been a part of MSU's athletic program since 1964. However, the women's basketball program has struggled financially throughout its history. In the early days of women's athletics, MSU's administration was concerned about the costs of supporting women's sports. The women's basketball program was not as popular as the men's basketball program, and the revenue generated from women's basketball was not sufficient to cover the costs of operating the program.

While track and tennis will likely always be non-revenue sports, women's basketball and other women's sports are struggling to make ends meet. The women's basketball team was asked to play its 27-game schedule on a budget of $10,953. That seems woefully short when its budget is just barely above a non-revenue spring sport. Meanwhile, the women's basketball team was asked to play its season and generally only on weekends.

The women's basketball team has had problems when they tried to compete nationally against schools with better programs. It used to be easy for MSU to qualify for the national tournaments because it won the state and regional titles regularly. Somehow the women's basketball teams are the most immersed in college athletics required by MSU to make the Spartans teams a cut about the other women's teams.

But now that's not enough to keep MSU's women's sports programs thriving. The business of entertainment is the new game in town. The women's basketball program, which has been struggling for years, is now facing a challenge. The women's basketball program has a budget of $7,000 and women's tennis has $6,225 for this spring. Women do have budgets almost equal to the men's in the non-revenue sports. For instance, the men's track team had a budget of $15,000 in 1977-78. U.S. may dispatch troops

A meeting with House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., yesterday raised the possibility that the U.S. may dispatch troops to Zaire to reinforce U.S. military personnel already stationed there.

A State Department spokesperson said the United States is making plans for the evacuation of American nationals from Zaire.

As usual, things are blooming crazy around campus. This season's most notable "crazy" seems to be the 1978 All-America Flower Trials. The professional flower judging organization recommends high standards of flowers, plants and garden design and has selected Michigan State University as the site for testing and judging new flower varieties by Canadian chosen to test, display and judge new flower varieties by All America. The MSU campus, along with other universities and garden centers, will be the location for the 30-week All-America Flower Trials. The trials will be open to the public at all times.

The 1978 selections will be rated by Ewart, president of All America in 1974. Then they will be rated by Ewart, president of All America in 1974. The flowers will be rated on the basis of several criteria, including:

- Quality of the flowers. A flower is judged to be yellow, not blended with pink or white.
- Seed germination — how well the seeds will grow.
- For seed and home-growers.
- Varieties such as petunias, snapdragons, marigolds, impatients and begonias will be rated. Ewart said.

- For seed and home-growers.
- Varieties such as petunias, snapdragons, marigolds, impatients and begonias will be rated. Ewart said.

The 1978 All-America Selections Flower Trials will take place on the MSU campus in late May. MSU is one of 31 testing grounds in the United States and Canada chosen to test, display and judge new flower varieties by All America. The trials will be open to the public at all times.

The new flowers are currently growing under the direction of horticulture professor C. T. Morehead, since the 1974 trials by the All-America Selections opened the testing grounds. The flowers are being transformed and planted in beds designated for trial areas. They will then be rated by Ewart, president of All America in 1974 and former member of the board of directors.
