Catch it, Zeke!

House Speaker Bobby D. Crim presented Zeke the Wonder Dog with a House Resolution Thursday. The shrunken version of the resolution, which praises all of Zeke's accomplishments, was pasted on a frisbee and then thrown out by Crim for Zeke to catch. Zeke's trainer, Gary Eisenberg, also received a copy of the resolution.

Legislators scold 'U' for hiring practices

MSU representatives were told by state legislators Thursday that the University is lagging in its commitment to employ more women and minorities.

Rep. George Cushingberry Jr., D-Detroit, said the Joint Committees on Affirmative Action as well as the speaker of the house and other legislators "are very concerned about the numbers of women and minorities employed at MSU — they don't look good."

Cushingberry reminded Bonner and Groty that the state Legislature has been appropriating funds to MSU and said it is "sick and tired" of hearing that the University cannot afford to hire more minorities and women.

Of the 40 people employed in the four top administrative professional levels at MSU, there is one woman and no minorities. The salaries at those levels range from $19,650 to $38,420 per year.

"The University is in bad shape," Cushingberry said. Assistant Vice President of Personnel and Employee Relations Keith Groty said 64.8 percent of the employees in the lower non-academic levels of employment at MSU are women.

"But that includes a lot of secretaries," Cushingberry said. "Yes," Groty answered, "that includes everybody."

Minorities make up 9.5 percent in the lower non-academic level of employment, he added. Cushingberry asked Ralph W. Bonner, assistant vice president and director of human relations, how extensively MSU has searched for minority instructors and professors.

Bonner said that there simply are not enough qualified minorities to fill the professional teaching positions. A "reasonable percentage" of minority students enter college as freshmen but either fail to complete a degree or do not continue on to graduate school.

Cushingberry suggested that the low number of minorities and women available for professional jobs at MSU is the result of "institutional racism as it relates to the type of professor who is training or teaching."

"Perhaps we need to work with the deans of the headquarters who may do bodily harm to our members or to the building," Harvey Schwartz, Skokie village corpora-to make an active effort toward increasing the numbers of minorities and women," he said. "MSU is too far behind in 1978."

"We are very conscious about the representation of minorities in the teaching staff," Cushingberry added. "The University is responsible for enrolling enough minorities to be trained in special need areas so they can fill the professional positions."

"If MSU is really serious about affirmative action you will take extra steps," Cushingberry declared.

"We've got to find out where the problems are. Perhaps it is a personality problem," Cushingberry held up a copy of Wednesday's State News and said, "I see that MSU has dismissed its affirmative action officer who presumably has been doing a good job — any comments?"

Move to discuss Pollock defeated

A move to discuss the firing of Mary Pollock, director of women's programs at MSU, during today's MSU Board of Trustees meeting was narrowly defeated Thursday by a vote of three to two.

However, the trustees agreed that a review of her dismissal was in order, with President Edgar L. Harden warning that if the board discussed Pollock's dismissal it would be "bad for the University."

Trustee Jack Stack, R-Alma, introduced the motion to add to today's meeting agenda an item to discuss Pollock's dismissal and possible violations to the board's affirmative action policy stemming from her exit.

Stack called for a roll-call vote which resulted in Trustees Patricia Corrigan-Strickland, D-Farmington Hills, Don Stevens, D-Bloomfield Hills, and Raymond Krolkowski, D-Birmingham opposing the motion and only Stack and Trustee Aubrey Radcliffe, R-East Lansing, voting for it.

Pollock, who is also MSU Title IX coordinator, was dismissed by Robert Perrin, vice president of University and Pollock was not appointed by the board, and all procedures were followed concerning her dismissal," Perrin emphasized.

Acknowledging the fact that a board discussion would set a precedent, Stack nevertheless considered the motion in order.

"I have questions about the operation of this department regarding minorities and handicappers that makes me believe this is not an isolated incident," Stack said.

Trustees Stevens and Krolkowski also agreed with Corrigan-Strickland's rationale and saw no reason to question the decision.

President Edgar L. Harden urged board members to reject the addition to the agenda and not discuss Pollock's dismissal.

MAY BE CALLED FOR FINAL VOTE

Illinois fails to OK ERA

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — The Illinois House Thursday by two votes — 117-107 — to approve the proposed federal Equal Rights Amendment, but a final tally call was postponed so the issue could be called again for another vote.

The resolution calling for Illinois to ratify the proposed 27th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution banning sex discrimination by 107 votes or a three fifths majority was approved.

Before the tally was officially taken, Rep. Corneal A. Davis, D-Chicago, ERA sponsor, asked for a postponement of the action means the resolution can be called one more time for a vote.

A heated debate broke out on the floor during moments of the vote tally, with members trying to lobby other members and Gov. James R. Thompson, D-Chicago, Republicans and urging them to ratify the ERA.

The vote came less than a month after Sen. Carter traveled to the Illinois State Capitol to make a personal appeal for the ERA before a joint legislative session.

"This is no longer an issue that affects Illinois, this is an issue that affects this nation," thundered Davis during Thursday's debate.

"It's clear that the women of America have equal rights and they have those rights now," countered Republican Rep. Donald E. Deuster, an ERA opponent, who said ERA would subject women to military draft.

House galleries were jammed during the lengthy and emotional debate, with Jayne Thompson, wife of the governor, among the onlookers. One ERA opponent held up a picture of an aborted fetus, dramatizing opponents' contention that ERA will foster abortions.

On June 7 — barely two weeks after Carter's visit — the House fell six votes short of the three fifths vote required to approve ERA, 101 to 64. But supporters immediately introduced new, identical resolutions to ratify the proposed amendment.

The ERA, which would outlaw discrimination based on sex, has been approved by 35 states and must be ratified by three more by March 22, 1979, to become part of the Constitution. Four of the 35 states which have ratified the measure have since rescinded approval, but the validity of that move still is in question and the Justice Department has said it is up to Congress to decide.

The states which have rescinded approval are Kentucky, Tennessee, Idaho and Nebraska. Kentucky's action was vetoed, however.

CHICAGO PARK NEW TARGET

Nazis drop Skokie march plans

By MARC WILSON Associated Press Writer CHICAGO (AP) — Nazi leader Frank Collin canceled plans Thursday for his swastika-bearing stormtroopers to march through heavily Jewish Skokie, where more than 4,000 residents are survivors of World War II Nazi concentration camps.

Collin, wearing full Nazi regalia at a news conference in his party headquarters, said the proposed march Sunday in Skokie "was pure agitation on our part to force the system to restore our rights to free speech," by granting a permit to march in a Chicago park.

"... As long as we did not have the right to free speech we had to agitate in an area where we could get the most attention for our cause," he said.

Collin announced the cancellation after saying he had issued a "shoot-to-kill" order to members of his National Socialist Party of America against anyone "in the area of the headquarters who may do bodily harm to our members or to the building," Harvey Schwartz, Skokie village corporation counsel, said the Nazis' parade permit "will be" revoked.

Judge George N. Leighton formally signed an order Thursday, saying Collin's group may march in Chicago's Marquette Park without posting insurance as required by the city.

But the park district said it was studying Leighton's order and hoped to find a way to block Collin's request for a July 9 parade permit in the park.

"We haven't given him a permit and we don't want to give him one," said district spokesperson Arnie Matansky.

The Jewish Federation of Chicago said it would cancel its counter-demonstration in Skokie if Collin canceled the Nazi march there. The federation said as many as 50,000 persons would be available to attend a counter-rally.

influence-buying hidden since 1970, report states

WASHINGTON (AP) — High U.S. officials ignored repeated warnings as early as 1970 that Korean rice dealer Tongsun and Korean Central Intelligence operatives were trying to buy influence in Congress, the Senate Intelligence Committee said Thursday.

The overseas intelligence officer in the committee staff that he could not report on other cases where the information was reporting had met with such silence at Washington," the committee said in a 50-page report.

The committee has examined the full report of the executive branch and has decided that prior to 1975, no effective check was taken by anyone in authority to see what was going on," the report said.

Adlai Stevenson III, D Ill., chairman of the subcommittee which produced the report, told reporters he could not rule out the possibility of a cover-up. He said that while no evidence of a cover-up could be found, "the circumstances raise some suspicion."

Stevenson said the panel was unable to find documents in the files of the State Department which would have allowed it to learn who in government knew about cash payments he allegedly made to some legislators.

Trial ADC program up in air

By LINDA BRAY State News Staff Writer An experimental Aid to Dependent Children client reporting system in Ingham and Genesee Counties, which saved the state an estimated $2.58 million last year, may be eliminated in Ingham County.

The project is currently prevented by a court order from continuing in 19 counties receptive to the system.

The system, if implemented statewide, could save the state as much as $10 to $15 million, said Wesley Priest, the Michigan Client Reporting System director.

The experimental CRS project requires monthly reports from anyone receiving ADC funds in Ingham or Genesee counties to show their continuing need for funds.

John T. Dempsey, director of Michigan Department of Social Services, said there is a provision in a 1977 appropriations bill that said CRS could not be expanded without legislative approval.

But, he said, that decision was an administrative one. He added that the attorney general's office has appealed the case.

"We now have to wait until the court decides or until the two house appropriations committees give their approval," he said. He also said they have been waiting for committee approval for seven months.

"We've been awaiting a letter, but we don't think that letter will ever come," Priest said. "Nothing has happened, they haven't said yes or no. Now they're adjourning and won't be back in the fall."

State Rep. Joe Young, D-Detroit, of the House Appropriations Committee said the legislature will take action on the CRS project.

"We're going to have a pilot system in Wayne County and the system will be eliminated in Ingham County," Young said.

The Wayne County pilot study on client reporting would be largely funded by an $874,000 HEW grant, he said.

"That's where the major problems are and that's where the people are," Young added.

4 men killed in Belfast conflict

BELFAST Northern Ireland (AP) — British troops shot and killed four men in a clash with Irish Republican Army militants trying to blow up a post office depot the British army reported Wednesday.

One of the men was an innocent passer by caught in the crossfire of the ambush officials said. Another civilian a motorist was wounded.

Police and troops set up extra patrols and roadblocks in anticipation of reprisals by the IRA an army spokesperson said.

The shootout occurred shortly after midnight at a post office maintenance depot on Ballysillan Road in north Belfast. The spokesperson said a group of men were spotted carrying bombs near the post office.

The men were challenged the spokesperson said and there was an exchange of gunfire. Four men were shot dead.

The spokesperson said the troops did not open fire until fired on by the intruders.

Human rights group attacks Guinea policies

LONDON AP — Between 2,000 and 4,000 political prisoners are being held under extremely harsh conditions in Guinea, Amnesty International reported Wednesday in a briefing paper on the West African country.

The rule of President Sekou Toure since independence from France nearly 20 years ago has seen a significant proportion of the country's educated elite — civil servants, army officers, teachers and students — Muslim and Christian religious leaders — imprisoned, killed or forced into exile, said the London based human rights organization, which won the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize.

Farmers and small traders also have been arbitrarily imprisoned or driven into exile, and the Foutah ethnic group, comprising one-third of the five million inhabitants, has been subjected to harassment and intimidation, arrest and imprisonment.

"Little dictators" litter Africa, press claims

LAGOS Nigeria AP — A government-owned newspaper said Africa is littered with little dictators with scant regard for civic individual rights.

In a Wednesday editorial reflecting formation of a French-backed intra-African peacekeeping force for Zaïre's embattled Shaba province, the New Nigerian said. The solution lies in good government among the nations of the continent.

The paper said it was an extent of ignorance or at best a flight from reality to think peacekeeping forces mind from France or the U.S. or even from the OAU Organization of African Unity are the solution to periodic rebellions as in Shaba.

Shaba province was invaded last month by an estimated 4,000 Lunda tribesmen striking from bases in Angola where they have lived in exile since the early 1960s. The invasion was put down by French foreign legionnaires aided by Belgian paratroops. The French and the Belgians have been replaced by forces from several African countries.

O'Neill sides with Carter on veto issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill agreed Thursday with President Carter that Congress has gone too far in seeking veto rights over executive branch actions. O'Neill's comments may help to defuse a potential constitutional fight.

In a special message to Congress

End Washington-Moscow attacks, U.S. says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has called for Washington and Moscow to halt public denunciations of each other.

A State Department statement suggested the two powers concentrate on negotiating settlements that would substantially contribute to the prospects for long-term, stable relations.

The conciliatory statement, issued Wednesday, was in response to a blunt attack on President Carter last week in Pravda. The Communist Party newspaper had accused the administration of "deliberately worsening" relations with Moscow and "whipping up" the arms race. U.S. officials said the low-keyed American response reflected a decision by Carter and other top policy-makers to concentrate on issues instead of counter-accusations.

"We didn't want to have a retort for a retort," said one official who asked not to be identified.

The Soviet attack was considered the broadest and bluntest to date on Carter and his administration. It rebuked him personally for his June 7 speech to the U.S. Naval Academy calling on Moscow to choose between cooperation and confrontation.

California welfare cases hurt by tax cuts

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Reacting to Proposition 13 property tax cuts, Democratic legislators voted this week to deny cost-of-living increases for 2.17 million California welfare recipients.

The nearly unanimous vote of the 57-member Assembly Democratic Caucus went one step further than Republicans had demanded as their price for support of Gov. Edmund Brown Jr.'s $5 billion rescue bill for local governments hit by Proposition 13 tax cuts. The Democrats voted to deny $233 million in welfare cost-of-living raises, provided that state employees, legislators, judges and local employees paid by state surplus funds also get no raises.

Brown, meanwhile, scheduled a televised address to Californians Friday on Proposition 13, and Republican lawmakers pressed for broad new spending limits on state and local government.

'No frills' tax cut agreed upon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration and the House Democratic leadership agreed Wednesday on a "no frills" $15 billion to $20 billion tax cut for next year that excludes proposals aimed at reforming the tax code, administration sources said.

A spokesperson for House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill,

D. Mass., said O'Neill favors the compromise and would push for the proposal among members of the House Ways and Means Committee.

But a committee source said the administration may be stating the extent of the agreement and that Rep. Al Ullmann, D-Ore., committee chairperson, would "wait and see" how the Carter proposal is greeted by committee members.

It was not known, however, whether the compromise would win a majority in the House, since it also omits any reduction in current capital gains taxes. Such a reduction has attracted widespread congressional support.

The administration sources, who declined to be identified, said the compromise resulted from a decision by the administration that it was the only acceptable way to get a tax cut for Americans next year.

While President Carter obviously retreated on his demands for tax reform measures in the bill, including a reduction in the so-called three-minute lunch tax writedoff, he still hopes to win approval for tax code changes at a later date, the sources said.

The compromise, worked out with the Democratic leadership at a meeting Wednesday, does not say exactly how large the cut would be, but that it could be as low as $15 billion or as high as $20 billion in order to hold down the budget deficit and demonstrate the administration's commitment to fighting inflation.

Sources have said previously the administration privately would not be adverse to a $15 billion cut as a way of helping to lower the nation's budget deficit to below the psychological $50 billion level in fiscal 1979.

The sources said the administration officials told the congressional leaders that the tax cut package now being considered by the House Ways and Means Committee was "an acceptable giveaway."

Critics of the capital gains tax cut have argued that such items as stocks and bonds have sought to include amendments reducing rates in the tax cut package before the committee.

One proposal by Rep. Tom P. O'Neill, R-Vt., would cut the capital gains tax rate from 28 percent to 20 percent, but such a move could have a negative effect on the business of other taxpayers.

Under the compromise, tax cut would be effective Jan. 1 and would be phased in over a period of two years, but the administration has said the deal is not negotiable.

Labor backers lose to filibuster

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of proposed labor law revisions abandoned efforts to day to break a long filibuster and the Senate agreed to send the controversial measure back to committee for redrafting.

After voting for the sixth time against cutting off the filibuster, the Senate agreed without objection to have the measure returned to the Human Resources Committee.

Under a motion by Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, the panel is not required to return the bill to the floor. It has authority to do so anytime after July 15, however.

Normally, sending legislation to a committee under such circumstances dooms it to defeat. It is not immediately clear when or whether the panel would send the hotly contested measure back to the floor.

The action was a major victory for business organizations, who lobbied heavily against the bill as well as for the Republican filibuster leaders.

It represented a defeat for the Carter administration and organized labor, both of which worked long and hard to muscle the bill through the Senate.

As an anti-filibuster vote, the sixth, began, Byrd announced he would vote against limiting debate, signaling an end to the fight to break the filibuster which began May 16.

The vote on cutting off debate was 54-45, seven shy of the 60 needed.

British prime minister says Soviets want arms limitation

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister James Callaghan said Thursday that despite strains in U.S. Soviet relations Kremlin leaders "are just as ready and keen" as President Carter for a pact limiting strategic nuclear arms.

In an exclusive interview with The Associated Press, the British leader noted that Moscow's policies in Africa, its harsh reaction to Carter's human rights campaign and its arms buildup have adversely affected public opinion in the West.

But he added: "That does not prevent the leaders of the countries concerned from judging where their interests lie."

It's a shared American-Soviet interest to conclude a squarely balanced second phase strategic arms limitation agreement SALT II, Callaghan said. To hold that up because of Soviet "adventures in Africa would be quite wrong," he said.

Callaghan was asked whether he thinks the Soviet's strategic aim in Africa is to create a belt of friendly states across the waist of the continent, below the Sahara, linking the Indian and Atlantic oceans. "I'm sure they would like to," he replied. "That's been an extension of their thinking about these matters, and they're ready to face the face of it. They want to go beyond a certain point, but I think it's important to think about these matters."

Doonesbury comic swell O'Neill's mail

WASHINGTON (AP) — A comic strip posing the question of investigation of South Korean entrepreneur Louis Paik to some of its members has swollen House Speaker Tom P. O'Neill's mail, but he isn't amused.

Cartoonist Garry Trudeau's Doonesbury strip just topped off a series of frames on the situation with a cartoon readers to send to O'Neill at his Capitol office, asking information and urging public hearings.

O'Neill's office refuses to say how many have been received, but he isn't commenting. It was understood that at least 200 more than 200 coupons have been delivered.

The coupon has boxes readers may check to request information of alleged payments to various members, it says. "Yourself $6,000 in parties."

There have been no allegations that O'Neill received money from Paik, but the speaker has acknowledged he has sometimes a guest of honor, at parties given by the entrepreneur for years as a lavish entertainer. O'Neill said he regarded Paik as a prominent host, not as an agent of the South Korean government.

Divestiture criteria approved by trustees

By PAUL COX
State News Staff Writer

The MSU Board of Trustees Investment Committee Thursday unanimously approved guidelines for corporations to follow in pulling out of South Africa.

The report outlines 16 indices which the committee believes corporations should follow in pulling out of South Africa. It also details various approaches to be used in implementing the board's policy.

The first four indices forbid future corporate expansion or investment in South Africa. Indices five and six call on corporations not to further apartheid. Indices seven through 15 urge companies to promote racial equality.

The last index gives the companies an important option for completing the board's guidelines, said Paul Hurrell, chairperson of the University Committee on Academic Environment.

A company's first choice is to state publicly that it will withdraw rather than sending MSU a statement of exact compliance with the board's guidelines.

"A number of companies believe they are close to the board's policy, but if they were asked directly they would have to say no and divest," Hurrell said.

A second option would allow a corporation to tell MSU that it will comply with the indices.

The second part of the report emphasizes board communication with corporations and banks, governments and areas with in the University, that have South African ties.

The report also recommends that MSU work with other universities to establish a broader base in monitoring the South African situation.

"I think this (the report) is an excellent and timely step forward," Hurrell said.

The three trustees on the investment committee and two other trustees in attendance all voted approval.

In other investment committee action Roger Wilkinson, vice president for business and finance, reported that the University had sold five of the eight Stony Creek Village properties left to MSU by Sarah VanHousen Jones.

House changed to save energy

By PAULA DYKE
State News Staff Writer

With support from East Lansing, a local group of energy minded volunteers is working to create a model home of the 1980s by re-structuring an existing local house. The house, an older duplex at 135 Linden Street, to the Urban Options Corporation was recently approved by the East Lansing City Council. The corporation is to "retrofit" the duplex within a year, making it a more energy efficient dwelling.

The group is also soliciting local contractors for materials and labor and seeking assistance from MSU graduate students in energy related studies.

Tom Price, head of the non profit group, divided the "retrofitting" plans into two phases.

Phase one would take place in the first few months, he said. "Small energy saving items will be added to the house — things like blown insulation, caulking and storm windows."

Phase two, "As planned, phase two will include the addition of a greenhouse, solar panels and maybe even an experimental recycling toilet."

Price estimated that about $5,000 in materials alone will be needed to convert a house to a solar dwelling.

East Lansing will pay rent on the house for one year, including heat, light, water and insurance expenses.

Price said work on the house will start Oct. 1, if Urban Options is successful in its bid for $45,000 in Comprehensive Employment and Training Act funds to finance administrative expenses.

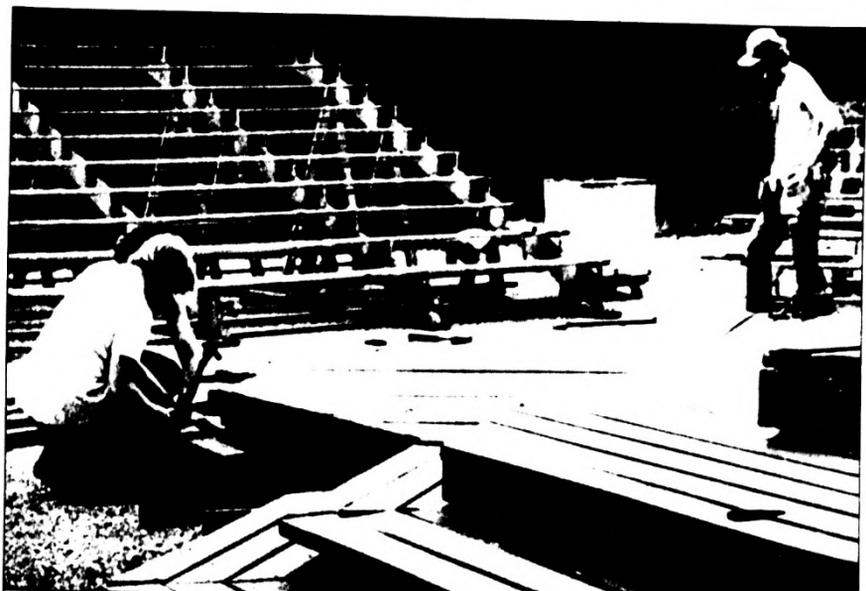

For the rest of the summer, the group will be surveying the house, taking measurements and completing the upgrading plans.

"We want to make the actual conversion of this house into a hands on kind of work experience," Price said.

Students from Lansing Community College, MSU and local high schools or any other interested citizen can enroll in the work program in an open air classroom approach, he said.

"We chose this house because it's a poorly insulated, old wood frame house typical of

'Incompletes' may change

By MIKE MEGERIAN
State News Staff Writer

The University policy regarding incomplete grades may undergo some changes if some professors have their way.

The recommendation, proposed at the Academic Council's June 6 meeting, would increase the time limit for making up an incomplete grade from five to ten weeks.

James McKee, professor of sociology, made the recommendation following a motion by W. Doyn Collins, University Committee on Academic Policy chairperson, to retain the old policy.

McKee argued that the policy was never implemented through academic governance but became a procedure through other administrative action.

"The policy is not legitimate," he said.

McKee said the old law, granting a ten week extension for making up a grade, was changed in winter 1974 by the Assistant Dean's Committee, a body that McKee said made a decision which it had no power to make.

But Dorothy Arata, assistant provost for undergraduate education, said the committee's role was merely an advisory one.

Arata said in 1973, the Educational Practices Committee, the predecessor of the current academic policy committee endorsed the requirement that incompletes be removed by the fifth week of the student's next term in attendance.

"Students were complaining they couldn't finish an incomplete," she said. "The old law, the 10 week procedure, enabled a professor to hold a student up until the last week of class."

Santo Camilleri, professor of sociology, backed McKee's recommendation and said he is not concerned with whether a student finishes an incomplete in five weeks or 10 weeks.

"The five week limit has discouraged some students," he said. "It establishes a harsh criterion that students are forced to follow. It's like the University saying, you can take an incomplete, but be aware of the consequences."

Future computer needs drafted

By PAUL COX
State News Staff Writer

A preliminary draft of an MSU computer resource policy and procedure statement has been completed by an MSU computer planning committee, said Jack Kinsinger, associate provost and committee chairperson.

The 32 page document with two appendices is not a concrete statement from the computer systems planning and policy committee, Kinsinger said. He added many changes and clarifications will be made as it is a "working document."

The committee was set up to determine MSU's future computer needs and recommend a system to administer those needs, Kinsinger said.

He said the committee of nine members from both academic and non academic areas has been working since March.

"We are faced with a million dollar question. Our major task is to satisfy the computer needs of MSU people but we have to keep cost in mind," Kinsinger said.

The major change suggested in the present draft is the establishment of a single office to oversee all computer systems at MSU.

Currently there are two major computer complexes at MSU — the computer laboratory and data processing, Kinsinger said, along with some mini computers.

The document suggests that a director of computer services be in charge of the single office. The position would be under the authority of the provost and would have complete control over all computer systems at MSU.

The document also states the director will be in charge of planning, budget, personnel, liaison, policy, purchasing and anything else he deems necessary.

Kinsinger said the preliminary draft was put together to gain feedback. The draft was given to college and department heads, the provost's office, vice-presidents' offices and current computer committee members.

"It will be unique in that this person will look at the whole University. It is not unique to have that kind of authority," Kinsinger said.

The cost of centralizing authority will be cheaper, Kinsinger said. With the current diversity no one knows exactly how much money is spent on computers at MSU, he said.

With the central office under the provost, Kinsinger said there would be tighter monetary control and less waste.

The other major thrust of the document is establishment of a computer services advisory committee. This group would consist of about 20 members from different colleges and an administrative group chosen by MSU President Edgar L. Harden regarding computer needs, the document states.

Fundraiser set to support ERA

MSU Students for ERA will hold a fund raising dinner at 425 Cowley in East Lansing Saturday from 4 to 8 p.m.

Money raised will enable members of the student organization to travel to Washington, D.C. in July.

The public is urged to attend in support of the extension. Suggested donation is $7.50 and the Mexican menu includes mixed drinks, along with beans, rice and tacos.

Grand River Avenue repaving set

By LINDA BRAY
State News Staff Writer

Grand River Avenue will be resurfaced between Michigan Avenue and Bogue Street this summer for the first time since 1961 as part of an estimated $550,000 Ingham County highway project.

Completion date estimates range from mid September to sometime before November.

The effect the resurfacing will have on traffic will be "terrible," said Public Information Officer Ed Blucher of the Michigan State Highway Department.

Blucher said the seven tenths mile drainage correction, curb, gutter and resurfacing project will be done under daily traffic flow and will begin by the end of July or the beginning of August.

Work on the Grand River project will move from lane to lane, he explained. "We will just block off one lane and direct the traffic around it," he said.

Jeff Clek, of the Spartan Asphalt Paving Co. added that both sides of the road will be worked on at the same time.

Clek is Equal Employment Opportunity Officer and Safety Director of Spartan Asphalt Company, the contracting company which offered the highway department the lowest bid for the Grand River job before Wednesday, the final bidding date.

Jacobson's

The Court was correct but still there is hope

Police officers, under no circumstances, should be allowed in newsrooms without a subpoena. The recent Supreme Court ruling that allows law enforcement personnel to search newspapers with only a warrant for evidence to a crime is making journalists all over the country wring their hands in despair. It is definitely a travesty. But we must regrettably admit that the 5-3 decision was reached correctly.

What the Supreme Court did was to reaffirm a ruling made in 1967 in Warden versus Hayden. That decision, made when the court was a liberal one, held that "mere evidence" could be used in a trial even when the evidence was obtained in a valid but warrantless search.

The First Amendment does not grant special protection to the press. It merely guarantees that press freedom will not be abridged. And the recent ruling does not abridge that freedom — it merely puts the press on the same level as everyone else, which is exactly where it should be.

The issue is the Fourth Amendment and whether all Americans — not just the press — should be subject to indiscriminate searches for evidence when they didn't have anything to do with the suspected crime. We, of course, do not believe that anyone should be a victim of unwarranted, indiscriminate searches. But if citizens have to suffer them — then so does the press. The press is not above the law.

Obviously then, the laws themselves are wrong, even though they do enjoy the distinction of having passed the constitutional acid test. The Supreme Court could have overturned the 1967 decision, but that possibility was never even under consideration. The Stanford Daily case could also be reversed if states were required to follow the federal rule which has never authorized the issuance of search warrants to collect "mere evidence" of a crime.

Considering the recent trends in the courts, Congress and the administration, the reversal is well near impossible. But there is hope. Ironically the hope was established by Justice Byron White, the author of the majority opinion in the case. White opened the door for special protection for the press while still maintaining that the First Amendment is not the place to do it.

Again, it is the Fourth Amendment at issue. White put it very succinctly when he opined, "the Fourth Amendment does not prevent . . . legislative . . . efforts to establish nonconstitutional protections against possible abuses of the search warrant procedure . . ."

As a result of the loophole White was considerate enough to point out, a bill has been introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives, by Robert Drinan of Massachusetts, titled the Press Protection Act of 1978. The bill would prevent any law-enforcement official from conducting any search or seizures on the premises of persons engaged in the gathering or dissemination of news without an adversary court proceeding.

Drinan's bill would guarantee that White's hopeful statement that "the rational prosecutor" would use a subpoena whenever possible — instead of a warrant — would be true. In other words, the irrational prosecutors wouldn't even be given a chance to abuse First Amendment rights under the bill.

It is a thorny issue and one that journalists have a tendency to react emotionally to. But if one truly believes that the Constitution has the power to protect the press — and we believe that it does — then the only expedient recourse is passage of legislation akin to Drinan's.

Carter treading thin ice with his African policies

We would like to believe that the chilling words uttered of late by President Carter have some ulterior motive known only to himself — like maybe he thinks congressional conservatives will support a SALT agreement if he comes down hard on Communist aggression in Africa. Maybe, but we find it hard to give Carter the benefit of the doubt.

Rather than crafty political games, we see the latest rounds of verbal exchanges between Carter, Castro, and the Kremlin to be more of an indication of the foreign policy confusion that seems to plague Carter's administration. The confusion stems from the fact that Carter's foreign expertise comes not from experience, but from advisors.

Carter is merely the tip of the iceberg when it comes to formulating foreign policy. The biggest chunk of ice — the chunk that never sees the light of day — is wedged firmly between the ears of National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski. Brzezinski, an ex-David Rockefeller man, is known as one of the foremost experts on Communist Russia in the West. His expertise began to surface in the early 1960s, when being a cold warrior was fashionable. His hard-line approach to Russia at the time earned him the respect of warriors and established his "Soviet expert" credentials.

Nothing wrong with having an expert or two in the cabinet, but the problem is that he apparently doesn't even know the meaning of the term human rights. (As a professor at Columbia University during the 1968 student takeover, Brzezinski wrote a polemic recommending that student protestors either be sent to "relocation centers" or be deported.)

While the president and United Nations ambassador Andrew Young brazenly chastise the world for its un-Christian ethics, Brzezinski lurks behind the scenes planning and scheming for the "inevitable" showdown — waiting for the time when he can sit back, stick his thumbs in his vest and say to the world, "I told you so."

Despite the sorry fact that when many of us consider the term "cold war" the first thing that pops into mind is the Fonze or 3D movies, the concept is not obsolete. In fact, it is a dangerously present reality.

The Cuban involvement in Africa is a detestable situation — yet is also understandable from the standpoint of many Africans. Cuba did not invade Africa, but was asked to come in by several nations after their pleas to the West fell on deaf ears. Unfortunately for those making the pleas, their philosophies were just a little too leftist for any assistance from the capitalist West. Unfortunately, the West seemed to forget that cold hard cash has unusually persuasive power — even to the most orthodox Marxist.

If indeed the African hardline is merely a ploy to swing votes to the SALT agreements (our fingers are crossed), then the trade-off is understandable — though not necessarily welcome. But if the present chilly trends become hard and fast policies, then Carter may find that the fires in Africa will burn longer than it takes the ice to melt.

RENALDO MIGALDI

Does art matter?

Why art? What the hell is so tangible and important about, say, a painting, a poem, or a long bluesy saxophone solo? Art's certainly entertaining, and nobody can deny that it helps keep up your spirits if you appreciate it, but is it really essential?

You're damn straight it is. Artists are not just a shiftless bunch of words who wear weird clothes and think about suicide all the time. Artists — the good ones, at least — carry out a function which is far more important to society than a lot of people realize.

For one thing, artists are black market traffickers in emotion — a commodity which many people in America would like to outlaw because it so often gets in the way of being rational. And in America, rationality is holy because you need it to achieve, to meet your goals, to become "great" in a country where "greatness" is all too often measured by size rather than by depth.

The true artist knows that emotion is the fuel on which the rationalizing mechanism runs. Emotions are as noble, concrete and mighty as the weather; they stubbornly resist being controlled by the rational side of the mind. You may submerge them from your immediate awareness, but you cannot eliminate them completely.

Again, the true artist not only respects the power of emotion but has a vision, a sense of mission and responsibility to the people who receive his/her communicated message, as well as to his/her entire cultural milieu. It is part of the artist's job to be alert and observant of the action in his/her society, to remain distanced from it just enough to be able to grasp the implications of developments in that society, and to communicate as honestly and powerfully as possible what ill or good these developments bode for human beings.

Playing this role means being sensitive. It means leaving oneself open and vulnerable to sensations which might often be painful. This is why artists talk so much about suffering.

At this point, myriad classic extreme examples of the suffering artist come to mind: Virginia Woolf, Vincent Van Gogh, Bill Holiday, Charlie Parker, all of whom teetered precariously on the brink of insanity, all of whom finally broke under the pressure of their sensitivity, all of whom produced great work.

The real nobility of artists like these came from their willingness to become sacrificial lambs. They suffered, and then not only to others what this suffering taught them, but transformed pain, loneliness and degradation into artistic beauty. In this way, the artist performs an act of redemption of himself and for all, as he fulfills — for an instant which is the moment of creation — his most godlike potentials.

Saying that artists have a social responsibility does not mean that their art, to be worthwhile, must be overtly political. Even the implications by the kind of emotional attitude it fosters.

The important thing is that artists must not, in an attempt to make their work "relevant," place it in a position subordinate to socio-political aims. Art cannot be the slave of politics; it must stand on its own merits. Then, the artists, the social thinkers, the scientists, the journalists, the political activists and others can stand side by side in a society which values the important contributions of each.

VIEWPOINT: ESMAIL'S TRIAL

Israel 'fabricated' charges

By BASIM ESMAIL

The family of Sami Esmail does not recognize the verdict of guilty given to him by an Israeli Court on June 7. We are outraged and shocked that a person can be found guilty with out a shred of evidence presented other than a "confession" obtained under physical and psychological torture, to say the least. We know Sami much better than the Israeli government and we are absolutely positive that he was not a member of any guerrilla organization. We believe that his so-called "crime" of membership in an illegal organization was a total fabrication by the government of Israel as an excuse to convict him, and thus to set an example to discourage other Palestinian Americans from expressing their political solidarity with their oppressed and homeless fellow Palestinians.

We can never forgive Israel for denying Sami the sacred right of being with one's dying father the last crucial days. For its interrogators to further state that Sami did not really care for his dying father (whom they say is not worth 10¢) is absolutely atrocious. Their denial of torturing Sami is to be believed as much as their denial of a well documented article which appeared in the Sunday London Times on June 19, 1977, which charged Israel with systematic torture of Palestinian prisoners sponsored at the government level.

Upon graduation from MSU in 1976 Sami visited Libya to investigate employment opportunities at the expense of the Libyan Arab Socialist Party. Immediately before graduation he had visited Houston, Chicago, and the Bay Area, at the expense of American corporations, also seeking employment. For the Israeli government to convert Sami's two week trip to Libya for the purpose of employment into a trip for "terrorist" training is absolutely mindboggling. For Israel to have Sami in Libya on Sept. 4, 1976, in a Hebrew confession (Sami does not know Hebrew) when in fact he was in Columbus, Ohio, at that time speaks for Israel's credibility. (Congressman Bob Carr has informed us that Sami signed an apartment lease in Columbus on Aug. 31, 1976). In an editorial in the New York Times on June 2, 1978, two professors of law, Freedman and Dershowitz, state that Sami's brother Basim was allowed to see him two days before he "confessed" when fact Basim was not allowed to see him one day after he "confessed." The distortion of this fact along with many others in the article shows how far they had to go to defend Israel and its inhumane treatment of its prisoners.

On the basis of our direct observation of the Israeli criminal justice system in Sami's case we can only come to the conclusion that thousands of other families of Palestinian prisoners have arrived and that is that Israeli courts are different than kangaroo courts and the trials are held mainly for foreign consumption. Rep. Robert Carr (D) of Michigan quoted as saying, "You have to wonder if he was to confess freely, why it took so long for him to decide in a sense to hang himself, you have to wonder why a U.S. citizen held without charge for almost a month. We only wish that the three judges that convicted Sami had wondered."

Esmail brother of Sami graduated from MSU in 1977 and is presently employed in Chicago as a financial analyst.

To be or not to be... a bee?

Yes, summer is here. Complete with warm weather, sunshine, flowers — and those ever-lovin' buzzin' bees.

But not to worry and not to fear, Gordon Wardell, Tom Deeb and Toby Wolson are here, yes with the bees.

King bee lover Gordon Wardell is a graduate assistant doing pollination research and studying bee disease for Robert Hoopgarner, professor of entomology. Assisting him are Tom Deeb and Toby Wolson.

Wardell started his beekeeping hobby at about the age of 14. "It just fascinated me," he said. "I grew up on a farm and I was just fascinated with social insects." Hmmmmmm.

One initial thought, however, can easily pop up in the average not particularly crazy about bees type of individual — you or me — but bees sting! Gordon agreed.

"They even sting me," he said. It is a defense mechanism. They protect their hives and their honey. They send out alarms, communicating with chemicals called pheromones, to let every body (the other bees, that is) know.

That in itself of course may be no solace after you have been stung by one of these protectors of the domain. If it is any comfort, they soon die afterward.

Your best counter attack in case a bee seems to be taking to your fancy by buzzing around your precious not yet stung body, is to believe it or not, remain calm and as still as possible.

"Don't wave at it. If possible, walk into some shade. They sense fear and they will come at you," Gordon said.

Try to look at it this way. This stinging is one of their major assurances of survival. Since bees do in fact die after they have stung their helpless victim, one might say that they commit suicide — in the sense of being martyrs.

Gordon said. "They gladly give up their life for the colony. They give all for the existence of the remaining."

Ancient Egypt regarded bees as sacred. That is easily understandable considering honey is a natural and pure food source.

Besides honey, of course, bees are known for their constant buzzing.

No, it is not a war cry nor signal that you'd better run for cover — they are simply fanning chemicals in the air.

So, try to look at bees in a different perspective. Granted, they do sting. But the honey is delicious!

Free concerts cap alphorn week

By KEN PARKER
State News Staff Writer

A long, mournful note haunts the air around the MSU Music Building like a mountaineer's lament. Soon other strains of similar music join it, blending into an eerie melody of ancient sound.

The music is coming from alphorns, courtesy of the tenth annual International Horn Society's workshop, which is being held this week at MSU.

Marvin McCoy, a Minneapolis, Minn. horn society member and organizer of this year's event, explained that international artists and "anyone who wanted to bring a horn" are attending the workshop.

Alphorns are imported from Switzerland, where they originated as a means of communication between mountains.

The horns begin as trees, bent by the weight of snow against their bases. It takes about 100 hours to hollow and shape the tree to specifications, then wrap it with the same type of cane used to make clarinet reeds.

The finished product costs from $800 to $1,000, McCoy said. "An alphorn is basically a French horn unwound," McCoy explained. "They are the same length."

The alphorn is not extremely popular in the United States, but "their popularity will grow," McCoy predicted.

It is already growing in Switzerland — there are even LPs of alphorn music in Europe, he said.

Douglas Campbell, host and coordinator of the workshop, estimated there are 100 alphorn players in the United States.

Besides communication, alphorns were also used to call in the cows, said member Loren McConnell, a public school teacher from Independence, Mo.

"The sound is all in the mouthpiece," McConnell said. "There are no fingering holes." McConnell grows the cane used to wrap the instruments in his backyard as a novelty and has been playing the alphorn for 12 years.

Gretchen Wise, a student at Western Michigan University and 10-year French horn veteran, is attending her first workshop on the recommendation of a professor. "I'm glad I came," she said. "It's really enjoyable."

The week-long workshop culminates today with recitals at 2:30 p.m. featuring Frank Lloyd and Rebecca Root, and at 4:30 p.m. featuring Henryk Kalinsky. A "gala concert" at 8:30 p.m. concludes today's events.

All performances are in the Music Building Auditorium. Admission is free, but McCoy warns it may be "a little crowded" as 600 workshop participants will attend.

This is the first such workshop at MSU and none are planned for the immediate future.

Past workshops were held in Switzerland, Canada, Indiana and Florida. Next year's will be in Los Angeles, Calif.

There wasn't even any snow, yet these players pulled out their alphorns and proceeded to toot a melodious tune.

Musicians Nancy Becknell, a faculty member at the University of Wisconsin, and Steve Elrich, a California lawyer, took part in the activities on campus for the Tenth Annual International Horn Society Workshop.

Director Robson, 64, dies

LONDON (AP) — Mark Robson, who directed such films as Valley of the Dolls and Earthquake, is dead of a heart attack at age 64, the U.S. Embassy here said Wednesday.

Robson died Tuesday night in London's Wellington Hospital, an embassy spokesman said. The body will be flown to Los Angeles Thursday, accompanied by his widow, Sara, and his three daughters, Judy, Martha and Jeanne. Funeral services were pending.

Robson started in the film business 45 years ago and worked his way from carrying cans of film to becoming a film editor, a director and producer.

"When I decided on motion pictures as a way of life, I knew I had to learn every facet of my craft — and that meant from the very beginning," Robson once recalled.

His first shot at directing came on a high class horror film, The Seventh Victim. Not long afterward, Robson directed Champion starring Kirk Douglas and was well on his way to becoming one of the top directors in Hollywood.

Among the better known of Robson's films are Peyton Place, The Inn of the Sixth Happiness, From the Terrace, Von Ryan's Express, The Prize, The Harder They Fall, Bridges at Toko-Ri, Phfft, and Lost Command.

Robson was born in Montreal on Dec. 4, 1913, and was educated at UCLA and Pacific Coast University. He worked for most of the major film companies in Hollywood.

This Weekend:

FILMS — The big news here is that the highly acclaimed film of the Band's farewell concert, The Last Waltz, opens tonight at the Meridian 8 West. The movie, which features appearances by Bob Dylan, Eric Clapton, Van Morrison and a host of other rock luminaries, is reportedly one of the best rock movies ever made.

THEATER — The Owl and the Pussycat starts tonight at 8 p.m. at the Barn Theater in Okemos, and will run through Sunday and again next weekend. This production is presented by the Community Circle Players. Information and reservations can be had by calling 349-4340.

Neil Simon's The Sunshine Boys kicks off the summer season tonight for the BoarsHead Players. The play will run Wednesdays through Sundays until July 9 at the Ledges Playhouse in Fitzgerald Park, Grand Ledge. Call 484-7805 or 352-4636 (6-27-7805 evenings) for further details.

The ever popular Jaques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris will be featured this weekend by the Black Sheep Repertory Theater in Manchester. Call (313) 428-9280 for more information.

ART — The chaotic art from the period around the turn of the century is the focus of an exhibit currently being shown at Kresge Art Gallery. An extreme range of styles is represented, including prints by Picasso, Cezanne, Whistler, Munch, and Toulouse-Lautrec. The gallery is open on weekends from 1 to 4 p.m.

MUSIC — Bluegrass fans willing to make the trip to Hastings will be in for a musical feast Sunday. The six-hour Thornapple Bluegrass Music Festival will be held in Charlton Park, which is five miles east of the town off M 79. The concert will include local favorites Joel Mabus and Native Sons, along with musicians from around the state. Tickets for the show, which starts at 12:30 p.m., are $3 for adults and $5 for children under 12.

Can't stop dancin' to that crazy music

Hey, I love music. Love it, love it, love it. Can't get enough. Always a tune bumping up down and around inside my head. When I shuffle down summertime Grand River Avenue in my funky vest and straw hat, it's to the rhythm of old Charlie Parker Miles Davis hot tunes, or maybe an Isley Brothers 45. Right now I'm sitting behind a typewriter and Edith Piaf's "La Vie En Rose" is running through my head. Mellow.

Mama says I used to dance in the playpen on humid July afternoons of late 1950s, jumping about on eager innocent halftoe while the little tin speaker phonograph crooned Luciano Tajolo and Claudio Villa italiano passion tarantellas and the doodling accordions and nervous mandolins bounced along like spaghetti.

Seeds of later obsession: Music, music, music when the Beatles broke big in Aeric AND I was taking accordion lessons and had to practice "Lady Of Spain" and "Gentil Pensiero" instead of "I Wanna Hold Yer Hand." After two years of accordion tedium, I quit practicing and watched my father tear his hair out for all the money he'd thrown away trying to train me to be a pasta music virtuoso. A few years later I wanted to play saxophone for the grade school band, but it was no dice with the old man.

Flash forward to 1967, the Summer of Love. I was only nine years old and cared nothing of free speech, flower power, or Vietnam. All I cared about was the WJIM radio "Live 25" and all the good tunes coming out of San Francisco. I wanted to play in a rock group so maybe my peers would respect me instead of picking on me all the time. If any of you rags from my past are reading this now, be informed I haven't forgotten the dead frogs in my lunch or the insulting nicknames.

In highschool, puberty hit me like a Mack truck, bringing along its own special and horrible brand of anguish. I fell passionately in love with a girl named Alice and wrote half a dozen songs about her, all of which I have fortunately lost. Later on, I learned how to play guitar and began using it to soothe my blues over an absurd succession of crushes on girls I didn't even know. Music, music, music!

There is something astonishingly elemental about the way music can ward off depression. When you've lost a love or a job or Janis Joplin or Judy Garland and about the same thing, it makes you feel better, but worse. And if that doesn't work for you, you can always switch to some good old Bach or Beethoven, and pretty soon you'll forget that anything was at all wrong in the great big wide wonderful world we live in.

Ha, ha, ha, time for some more tunes. Pardon me whilst I slip out of the newsroom and across the street to the record store.

Ahem, back again. Thank for waiting. I went to the used record shop and picked up on a half dozen old 45s dirt cheap, paid for the lot of 'em. You can buy them and own them up real good and they play almost like new. I got Al Green, Dave Bowie, Blues, Tommy James, and Steely Dan. Gonna have fun when I get home.

Good lord, my record collection keeps getting bigger and bigger. It's a sure sign of my age that I don't seem to be able to spend as much time listening to it anymore. So I have to work at it. I cram music into every available corner of my life. At parties I break out my friends with Anthony Braxton records. At work I hum Dexter Gordon's blues. Excuse me now, I gotta go dance.

Lee Strasberg acts in 'Tenant'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lee Strasberg said when he first went on the set of The Last Tenant, the director and the other actors were intimidated. "They were a little jittery," Strasberg said. "They were watching to see how I would behave. I think they were a little afraid I'd sit in judgment. That lasted until they found out I was more concerned with my own performance."

It could indeed be intimidating to work with Strasberg, one of the world's foremost acting teachers, founder of the famed Actors Studio and leading exponent of "method" acting. His students have included Marlon Brando, James Dean, Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward, Shelley Winters and Al Pacino.

"They were curious to see what I would do," he said. He laughed and added, "So was I."

Strasberg, 57, his moustache and thinning hair turned to white, makes a rare appearance — and his first ever on television — in the two-hour The Last Tenant, airing on ABC Sunday night. He was nominated for an Academy Award for his role of Hyman Roth in The Godfather — Part II.

He plays an elderly man whose failing health forces a family crisis. His oldest son, Tony Lo Bianco, insists on taking personal responsibility for his father despite his impending marriage.

The Last Tenant was written by New York school teacher George Rubino, whose script won the ABC Theater Award of $10,000. Jud Taylor directed, and Herbert Brodwin and Robert Berger, who turned Holocaust for NBC into an executive producer and duer.

Strasberg divides his time between New York and Los Angeles, where he operates Actors Studios and preaches teaching institutions in cities.

He doesn't get much sleep, he said. The stress and the studio are the forces in my acting now — will remain so because I feel the main contribution I make to the world."

Still, he conceded, he gets occasional acting assignments and would like more. He said he enjoys acting more than teaching. Acting to me is a pleasure. It's enjoyment. Teaching is hard work."

Springsteen's dark edge

By BILL HOLDSHIP
State News Reviewer
Thrilling heart shall rock day and night.
William Shakespeare
Darkness. In the midst of the '70s, Bruce Springsteen sought a bright ray of hope to pierce the darkness everywhere. Born To Run and his subsequent Park mythology, Springsteen's magic provided a rock dream by offering images of the loser as a hero, and created a "future of rock" by simply reinforcing everything great about its past. The time seemed ripe for an attempt at the meta-physical "Dancing In The Street," and people associated with the maestro with the second coming of the great street singer sprouted from the shadows like Jack Kerouac and James Dean.

Darkness. Springsteen never tired of the various degrees of darkness surrounding every aspect of his life, nor the sometimes darker aspects of the life he drew upon for most of his material. He was a jaded young man, to be sure ("The only sympathy I can offer, girl, is with this dirty hood"), but never lost sight of the hope to be found in the light of darkness. His was a vision of magical realism in the night and fantasy. There were guitars as switchboards, archetypal jukeboxes, and the brilliance that can only be found in the hearts of young men. There was survival, and there was passion.

Darkness. Never has an album so initially confused me as Bruce Springsteen's new Darkness On The Edge of Town (Columbia JC 35318). There had to be something here and my grasp and comprehension, something lacking. It felt at first in the music, as Born To Run provided exhilarating feel of cruising convertible at 100 mph. 50 percent of Darkness is a return to the maudlin music of earlier numbers like "Lost In The Flood." Bruce Springsteen definitely down, and it felt as though the darkness was beginning to overshadow.

Darkness. Springsteen really experienced what were the darkest years of his life, a period where he came into conflict with big ideas and all illusions were gone. Solipsism has never been one of Springsteen's philosophical devices, and he apparently had no desire to write about lawsuits. Instead, he transferred his dreary life to a universal scale, capturing life's darkness from any angle with a concentration on his once-romanticized and urban characters.

Bruce Springsteen
Darkness On the Edge of Town

Darkness. Springsteen's imagery hasn't really changed, only his vision. The spirits in the night are missing. On Darkness, the spirits have deserted, and "left us burned and blind Chasing something in the night." However, it is no longer clear what that something is, if it even exists at all. With each successive listen, it seems that the new lyrics will most effectively strike the members of rock's first generations — those who grew up with the false redemption promises, only to watch them fade. The Kiss Army won't understand. As Springsteen exclaims on "The Promised Land": "Mister, I ain't a boy, no, I'm a man!"

Darkness. In keeping with his tradition of a rock 'n roll continuum, Springsteen tells us that "summer's here and the time is right for racing in the street." It is no longer the time for dancing or fighting in the street, as Martha & the Vandellas and the Rolling Stones once told us. Racing is the perfect image for the '70s, almost a play on being born to run. However, from the tone of the LP, it's apparent that these racers are running on empty, to cop a phrase from another '70s visionary. Run as fast as you want, but, as Bob Dylan once chanted: "You ain't going nowhere." That final inevitable darkness still lurks around every corner.

Darkness. The death Springsteen hints at isn't a literal one. Instead, he is looking at members of the living dead, and the vision even invades his vision of life. It seems that Springsteen may be taking pointers from cynics like Lou Reed on the superb "Candy's Room." Despite the magnificence of love, still "to get to Candy's room, you gotta walk the darkness of Candy's hall." It's the underside of life, but it matters not whether the listener can relate to factory workers or street-gang urchins. After all, there is actually little difference between an executive and a mechanic when dreams begin to fade.

Still, it would be absurd for a beautiful dreamer like Springsteen to totally give up, and Darkness offers the listener three of the greatest songs of the Boss's career. Some things are still sacred against all odds, and Springsteen reaches his greatest moments of passion on these numbers. Interestingly enough, Clarence Clemons' saxophone is saved exclusively for these tunes, and this reflects the aura of passion to its fullest extent — the feeling that you could live forever.

The glory of love is sanctioned on "Prove It All Night" ("Girl, there's nothing else that we can do"). And Springsteen, though seemingly even more jaded than before, demonstrates that an honest stand is still possible no matter what the cost on "Badlands" ("I believe in the love that you gave me I believe in the hope that can save me/I believe in the faith that someday may raise me Above these badlands") and the self-explanatory "The Promised Land." When Springsteen sings, "I believe in a promised land," you really believe him. And the music here is so great that one can't help but feel the emotions, although it can only be understood through the experience.

My first reaction to Darkness On The Edge of Town was extreme disappointment. However, I'm now convinced that the LP will often make its way to my turntable during extreme fits of existentialism. Springsteen understands emotion if nothing else, and while Darkness isn't as uplifting as Born To Run, it's a masterpiece nonetheless. To paraphrase the great Bard's quote above, his throbbing (and gentle) heart will rock you, if only to soothe, and make the darkness of both day and night a little easier to bear.

Underrated British music talents showcased by three new albums

By DAVE DIMARTINO
State News Staff Writer
There's a sort of submerged, super-talented cult of young musicians that's been operating out of Britain for a relatively long time. Their only problem has been, and remains, one of limited exposure.
Three albums have recently been released which all share several of these musicians. Interestingly, former Yes and King Crimson drummer Bill Bruford is a central figure in the production of two of the LPs, and a former member of the band that produced the third. Each of the albums offers sophisticated musical fare that is considerably more intricate than the music produced by more famous techno-flash groups like Yes or Genesis — the latter band, incidentally, another past involvement of Bruford's — but nowhere near as commercially successful.

Bruford's current group, U.K., has released their debut disc, titled U.K. (Polydor PD 16146), and of the three LPs considered here probably has the greatest chance of success. The band's four members boast impeccable musical backgrounds: Bruford, as mentioned before, has played with Yes, King Crimson, Gong, Genesis, National Health and Roy Harper; bassist and vocalist John Wetton played with Bruford in King Crimson and has also been a member of Family, Mogul Thrash, Uriah Heep and Roxy Music; multi-instrumentalist Eddie Jobson has played with Curved Air, Roxy Music and Frank Zappa; and guitarist Allan Holdsworth has been a member of Tempest, Soft Machine, Gong, and the New Tony Williams Lifetime and has played sessions with Jean-Luc Ponty and British trumpeter Ian Carr, aside from releasing his own solo LP.

The band essentially sounds like the Fripp/Wetton/Bruford version of King Crimson, with Holdsworth's addition to the group only slightly modifying its sound. Jobson, whose compositional talents were revealed with Curved Air's superb Air Cut LP and largely suppressed in Roxy Music, is responsible for the bulk of the LP's material, with Wetton supplying most of the lyrics. By and large, the musicians interact superbly, playing as if they've been together for years.

Though the latter part of the LP's second side drags at times — due mainly to a thinness of material — as a whole, the album is excellent. I'm inclined to think the album largely signifies that the magic of King Crimson lives on, one way or another, with or without Robert Fripp. If the band manages to stay together long enough to produce a second album, most likely it'll be spectacular.

Prior to the formation of U.K., Bill Bruford put together his own solo album called Feels Good To Me (Polydor PD 16149) that is considerably meatier than U.K.'s effort, due mainly to the differing personnel. With Bruford on the LP are guitarist Allan Holdsworth, keyboard player Dave Stewart (formerly with Egg and Hatfield and the North, now with National Health), American bassist Jeff Berlin, Canadian trumpeter Kenny Wheeler and the very individualistic vocalist Annette Peacock.

The compositions on the LP are all by Bruford (with some occasional help by keyboardist Stewart) and the combination of superbly advanced musicianship and well-developed song-structure makes the album easily one of the year's best. The interaction alone between Bruford and bassist Berlin (who last was in East Lansing with Joe Farrell's group at the Silver Dollar Saloon) makes the LP a worthy purchase; Stewart's keyboard abilities, till now one of England's greatest-kept secrets, run rampant through both sides of the album and add the perfect finishing touch. And vocalist Peacock — ever the elusive jazz rock figure (check out her deleted I'm the One LP for details) — half-talks, half-breathes her lyrics which are, appropriately, pataphysical to the extreme.

Both this album and the third of the trio, National Health (Vista IMP 7002), typify all that's right with current British rock, such as it is. Actually, rock doesn't quite encapsulate what National Health or Bill Bruford does — terms like "jazz rock," "outmoded" as they are, are much better suited. Unfortunately, the term presently connotes some sort of dead end fusion, a la Billy Cobham or Stanley Clarke, when in fact the music these British musicians play is infinitely better on virtually every level.

After being without a record contract for a shamefully long period, National Health, in the midst of personnel transitions left and right, have produced a debut disc that is quietly stunning. Originally a composite of two excellent British bands, Hatfield and the North and Gilgamesh, the band has lost keyboardist Alan Gowen, percussionist John Mitchell and vocalist Amanda Parsons, though all three manage to make guest appearances on the LP.

Unfortunately, bassist Mont Campbell, former partner of Stewart's in Egg and founding member of National Health, is nowhere to be found. I've heard BBC tapes of the band with both Campbell and Bruford and the music was in many ways more sophisticated than what's to be heard here, which actually is saying quite a bit considering how advanced the group's music now is. My only gripe with the LP is the same I held for both of Hatfield's LPs: the band's guitarist, Phil Miller, incorporates an extremely smooth tone that almost never seems to change and occasionally verges on monotony. With Stewart's imaginative keyboard work the group's saving grace, I'd be considerably happier if Mont Campbell rejoined the band and Miller were to be replaced by another more interesting instrumentalist, perhaps a saxophonist.

Yet while National Health's LP isn't perfect, it approaches a level of musicianship that few other albums do. The fact that the album is the group's first release just gives us all the more to look forward to. Music like this just isn't very ordinary.

Summer lacrosse to be held

The summer lacrosse league may not have players smashing into each other, because body checking will not be allowed, but it still will give the participants a chance to work on the fundamentals of the game. MSU lacrosse coach Boku Hendrickson says that any college student that would like to learn the game can come out.

By JERRY BRAUDE
State News Sports Writer

For the love of lacrosse, MSU's co-head coaches Boku Hendrickson and Nevin Kanner have taken another step in attempting to promote the sport.

The two coaches will begin a summer lacrosse league July 9, and it will be played every Sunday for six weeks. The informal league currently has approximately 40 players, and is open to anyone in Michigan. So far, Detroit has been the furthest area that players have come from.

"Most of the participants are college players," Hendrickson said. "More than half the players on MSU's team will be playing. There will also be some players that graduated two or three years ago from MSU that will be playing."

The league will have a lot of clinic type situations.

"I'm pretty optimistic about the league," Hendrickson said. "We'll be giving a lot of tips. For example, from 12:30 to 1 p.m., we'll be working on stickwork, which is a very important part of lacrosse. We will divide the players into three groups — attackers, midfielders and defensemen — and give them some pointers."

The league will not have any body checking. "We'll be working on just stick checking and getting good body position," Hendrickson said.

Hendrickson is also hoping to get a lacrosse program into MSU's sports school next summer.

"I'm almost sure that we can get in," Hendrickson said. "But I would still like to keep the summer lacrosse league for next year, too. The sports school is only for one week, and you play nine hours a day, which is pretty intense."

During the school year, Hendrickson teaches physical education at Hannah Middle School and is trying to put lacrosse into the curriculum.

"I'm trying to implement a non contact, indoor lacrosse game," Hendrickson said. "It's a little different game than outdoor lacrosse, but it still should work out well. The participants will still have a chance to practice on their stick work."

Hendrickson has been teaching lacrosse to one of his students at Hannah Middle School, Chris Mellos, who will be entering high school next fall.

No high schools in the Lansing area play lacrosse, but Hendrickson is trying to institute the sport. He feels that promoting high school lacrosse in East Lansing will be an easier task than promoting it in Lansing.

"East Lansing has more money and open ideas," Hendrickson said. "Soccer has been started in East Lansing, and I hope we can start lacrosse on the club level."

Raising money for traveling will be a problem, though. Playing schools in the Detroit area won't be much trouble, but traveling to Ohio will be.

"Lacrosse is an excellent sport, and it compliments football well," Hendrickson said. "Personally, I think it's better than football because there are less injuries."

TEAMS PLACE TWELFTH IN NATIONALS

MSU Sailing Club readies for summer

By MIKE KLOCKE
State News Sports Writer

During the last 15 years, the MSU Sailing Club has finished in the top three in the Big Ten.

but competition is only one aspect of this 40-year old MSU club. Lee Wyatt, commander of the club, said the summer is naturally the time when members really get involved in club activities. And you need not be a student to join, either.

"During the summer there are a lot of recreational and social gatherings," Wyatt said. "The club members also offer free instruction to anyone who wants it."

The club has been in existence since the 1930s and currently owns 14 sailboats, which are kept at Lake Lansing near Haslett.

A meeting for anyone interested in joining the club or taking part in summer activities will be held June 27 at 7 p.m. in 208 Men's IM Bldg. After that, all the meetings will be held at the boat site on Lake Lansing on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Through intercollegiate rules, men and women compete separately in racing and regattas. But, both men and women are welcome in the club, Wyatt said.

In fact, MSU's men's and women's teams both finished in 12th place in the respective divisions in the national competition held earlier this month in San Diego, Calif. The men's team qualified for the nationals as the top team in the Midwest.

In addition, John Wilson, a junior at MSU, finished seventh in the individual competition. "In the nationals, the southern schools usually fare best since they are able to practice year round," Wyatt said. "Teams from Florida and Texas did very well."

The boats used in intercollegiate competition are 13 feet in length with a skipper and crew. During the summer, Wyatt said there are as many as 80 members in the club. The club does take out loans through ASMSU, but, for the most part, it is financed through the funds of members. Wyatt said the club has been fighting with the University to be recognized as a varsity sport so more funds would be available.

During the summer, the club will hold various events open to the public including a regatta on Sunday, July 9, at noon on Lake Lansing. This event will involve competition between members.

This is probably the busiest time of the year for the club, Wyatt said, although he emphasized that there are activities scheduled all year.

The Big Ten competition takes place during the fall and spring. And instead of closing down house for the winter, the club members are active in ice boating.

Wyatt said the free instruction the club offers is one of its most beneficial aspects and one of the top ways of recruiting members. And those members are necessary, since no outside money is provided.

As far as the teams the club competes against, some of the top ones include Notre Dame, Illinois and Ohio Wesleyan. Wyatt said competition has also included east coast trips against the Ivy League schools.

During the summer, all the competition the club has will be against fellow members.

"We'll have a lot of social activities, including a few keggers," Wyatt said.

MIKE KLOCKE

Two women I admire: Pollock and Fossum

Personally, I don't think Mary Pollock, who was recently fired from her job as director of women's programs at MSU, will be remembered as a martyr.

Instead, I think she'll be remembered as a person who was canned for doing her job. The people on campus opposed to Pollock felt she was too aggressive and alienated a lot of people with her outspoken attitude. Although the man who fired her, Robert Perrin, claims the termination had nothing to do with Title IX issue, it seems evident that her pre-occupation with sex equality in athletics — especially revenue-producing sports — was her eventual downfall.

Recently, Pollock spoke at an informal press conference before a group of journalism students. She was questioned before a group of journalism students. She was questioned about the "personality clashes" she had with some of her bosses, and was asked why she and her superiors didn't see eye-to-eye on the Title IX issue.

Pollock paused and replied, "Well, I guess it's just because my main priority is stopping discrimination, while their main priority is winning football games."

Pollock, who turned down a much higher-paying job elsewhere as an associate dean to take the MSU post, said she won't let the loss of this job take her away from the goals she has set for herself.

"I came here because of ideas I had, and I still want to work on these ideas," Pollock said recently. "My objective is for sex equity in higher education, and leaving MSU won't divert me from my goals."

"I am kind of disappointed because college education is on place where these ideas can be implemented, and there were a lot of possibilities here at MSU."

That seems like a very refreshing attitude, the kind you wouldn't expect out of someone who had just lost her job.

"Too bad you 'couldn't get along with her,'" Mr. Perrin.

If they had a contest for the most enthusiastic head coach at MSU, well, it wouldn't be much of a contest. MSU women's golf coach Mary Fossum would win, hands down.

I've only met Fossum twice, and to tell you the truth, I don't even know if she remembers me. But in just those two meetings, you could sense the love this woman has for the game of golf, and the fine rapport she has with her athletes.

You have to remember, of course, that success may have something to do with her happy-go-lucky attitude. In the five years the Big Ten women's golf championships have been held, MSU has either tied or won the conference title each time.

And this year the Spartans finished 11th in the nationals — the second best finish of any team in the northern half of the country.

So she has been very successful. But suppose she never had a golfer on her team who could break 100. I'll bet she would still win that hypothetical contest I spoke of.

An incident earlier in the year tells the story best.

State News sports writer Joe Centers and I were chatting with Fossum's two senior co-captains — Karen Escott and Joan Garety — at Par Mor's driving range.

Now here are two seniors who have played on three straight Big Ten champions. You'd think their comments would be about going out as winners by making it four in a row. Nope.

"The Big Ten Meet is what we are keying for. I hope we can win it for her," said Escott, pointing at Fossum, who was helping another team member with her swing. "She gets so excited when we do well."

Her husband, Bruce, is the MSU men's golf coach. Her son, Bobby, was a standout for the Okemos High School team and played in the Michigan Amateur in Charlevoix this week.

I called her Thursday about a story for the State News Summer Week edition, but she wasn't home... she was out giving golf lessons.

Correction: team entries due today

The deadline for entries for all men's softball teams for the summer leagues is today at 5 p.m., not June 26 as stated in Thursday's State News.

This deadline is for both the non-umpired league with no playoffs, which costs $5, and the umpired league with playoffs, which costs $25 per team.

It is essential that the teams get their entries in by today since play will begin Monday.

The deadline for entries for the women's softball league and co-recreational sports is today at noon.

The State News regrets any inconvenience caused by the error.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

PanTree's new approach to "Happy Hour": 20% off everything—even the after dinner mints.

Nearly every place has a happy hour, but in true PanTree fashion, East Lansing's prettiest restaurant has gone to extremes.

All summer long, every day of every week, every single thing on the menu is now 20% off, between 2 and 5 p.m. Everything, even the after dinner mints.

"It's less complicated that way," say co-owners Paul Kacer and Jim Wade. "We'll write up the check as usual, then just knock 20% off at the cash register."

In the late summer afternoon, it's beautiful to just be in the PanTree: you get the sun, through the skylight and all of those giant windows. You're surrounded by trees and plants. And now you can order a quiche and an Orange Blossom Special, at 20% off!

What, you are asking, is an Orange Blossom Special? Another new innovation by the freshest restaurant around — fresh squeezed orange juice and brut Champagne. Just the thing to drink in the gentle sun. (Goes great with brunch, too.)

Slowly the PanTree has evolved. The best 24-hour restaurant in town became the best place to have breakfast. Then came quiche, and the dinner specials that changed East Lansing's dinner habits. When wine and beer were added, and the PanTree started accepting credit cards, it became the hot spot for lunch.

Now, with 20% off and the Orange Blossom Special, late afternoon is a perfect time of day for a PanTree get-together.

Almost makes you wish you could sell your kitchen and buy a personal booth at the PanTree, doesn't it?

...ITED AS 'IDEAL SOCIETY' PROMOTERS

Nine honored by TM program

By KIM CRAWFORD
 Nine MSU faculty and staff members were among nine area people chosen by the Lansing Transcendental Meditation Program to receive awards for their contributions in creating an ideal society.

Jackson established the Mildred Erickson Fellowship in 1974 to assist women whose education may have interrupted to return to school. Currently she is manager of the Union Ticket Office and is completing her doctoral studies in Continuing Education.

Robert Page, director of Instructional and Public Television, for "Information and Inspiration." Page was appointed as general manager of WKAR-TV in 1968 and lauded for his role in merging public and instructional television.

Howard Koenig, director of the Center for Environmental Quality and professor of electrical engineering, for "All Possibilities: Research and Development."

Lillian Rosen, instructor in Advanced Transcendental Meditation Programs, Rosen is the only instructor of advanced programs in the United States.

Standby gas plan set

WASHINGTON (AP) — A gasoline rationing plan would distribute coupons on the basis of the number of family or business owned automobiles announced Thursday by Secretary James R. Schlesinger.

Schlesinger said the plan would also permit a so-called "white market" under which motorists could obtain additional supplies of coupons by finding someone willing to sell them.

Former President Gerald R. Ford, in one of last acts before leaving office in January 1976, proposed a rationing plan that would allocate fuel based on the number of licensed drivers in a family.

OSHA seeks government jurisdiction
 WASHINGTON (AP) — The private workplaces, says it is powerless to inspect federal agencies, where worker related injury and illness cost taxpayers billions of dollars a year.

OSHA new powers to crack down on hazards in other federal agencies.
 In a letter accompanying the proposed order, Wright wrote that a lack of vigilant enforcement of health and safety rules by government agencies has resulted in "an unacceptably high price to pay, both in tax dollars and in lives lost or seriously disrupted."

Carter official sent to Angola

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration sent a high level official to Angola on Wednesday to discuss with leaders of the Marxist government ways of settling border conflicts with neighboring Zaire and the South African held territory of Namibia.

Donald McHenry, U.S. deputy permanent representative to the United Nations, follows a decision by the administration to expand its contacts with Angola.

Associate State Department spokesperson Thomas Reston confirmed that McHenry "is going to Angola to discuss matters of mutual interest" between the United States and Angola, but declined to disclose the envoy's timetable or details of the talks.

McHenry is a specialist in African affairs and has visited other countries in southern Africa trying to arrange an orderly transition to black rule in Namibia, a territory also known as South-West Africa that is controlled by white-ruled South Africa.

Take two annually.

Just two tiny silver oxide batteries will power this slim electronic calculator for approximately 1,000 hours of operation or an average of two batteries a year. The EL-5805 is a handsome assistant for engineers, mathematicians, scientists and students. So, for an average of two batteries a year, you'll get plenty of calculating power in a small package.

Koreagate probers date scandal to 1970

Local home redesigned

(continued from page 1) was a case study of the activities of the role of U.S. intelligence agencies in dealing with alleged improper conduct by the KCIA - a "friendly" intelligence service representing a country with which the United States has close ties.

The report said that U.S. intelligence was aware that KCIA officers were "operational" here as early as 1963 but that the United States had no policy dictating that their activities should be curtailed.

It had become clear by 1971 that the regime of President Park had set out to eliminate opposition to it by South Koreans living in the United States, it said.

State Department officials issued warnings but the report said "there is no evidence that any action was taken by the United States to halt the disruptive practices."

By mid-1973 the KCIA was trying to block anti-Park demonstrations "by all possible means," the report said. It said Korean associations in the United States "were to be penetrated, manipulated and weakened by the KCIA and demonstrators were to be intimidated."

The KCIA had tried and failed to block Kim Dae Jung's meetings with U.S. officials during a 1971 visit, it added.

The report said U.S. intelligence agents had reported that "when Kim planned a return trip to the United States, the KCIA even considered a plan to use criminals in the United States to kill him."

Kim was kidnapped in Japan and taken to Korea, where he later died.

The intelligence committee said that as early as 1970 the U.S. ambassador to South Korea has complained at the highest levels of the Korean government that aggressive and "amateurish" lobbying in Washington by Tongsun Park was proving annoying and eventually could prove extremely embarrassing.

Tongson Park continued his efforts, and in 1971 the FBI opened a three-month investigation of allegedly improper South Korean lobbying efforts. The report said the probe was "limited in scope and conducted without the benefit of all available intelligence information."

It said the FBI did not have the benefit of a State Department memo which stated that "we know for a fact" that Tongsun Park offered to contribute to the campaigns of several members of Congress just before a military aid bill was presented to Capitol Hill.

It said the FBI did get intelligence reports stating that Park was definitely "under the direction" of the KCIA, and that as President Park's official rice sales agent here, he was expected to use lucrative commissions to pay for Korean lobbying in the United States.

"Today this kind of how to information is spread all over media presentations and various displays in different rooms," Price explained. "We want to centralize it, perhaps create a first floor of the duplex totally accessible to handicappers."

Provided the experimental project is a success, he said, Urban Options would propose to the city council to turn part of the structure over to the Center for Handicapper Affairs of Lansing.

A long range goal of Urban Options Corporation is to set up four different task forces in the community to examine future methods of waste treatment, transportation, urban agriculture and housing.

Similar home conversion projects have been successful in Grand Rapids, Milwaukee, Wis., and Berkeley, Calif., Price said.

"We're taking this thing one step at a time," he said. "We want to educate the community as best we can so people will know how to introduce energy conserving techniques into their own homes."

Legislators hit 'U' hiring

(continued from page 1) connected with either of their offices and was out of their control. Bonner also pointed out to Cushingberry that the official title of Pollock's former position is the Director of Women's Programs, not the director of affirmative action.

Cushingberry requested that Groty prepare a "flow chart" describing the process that the personnel department uses to hire an administrative professional, including advertising, interviewing and final approval of the position.

He asked Bonner to provide the committee with a report on the total number of dollars MSU spends in building contracts and percentage of funds used in contracting with minority companies.

He requested that the information be returned to the committee within 10 days.

ADC test program may be eliminated

(continued from page 1) He said an appropriations bill that could decide this project is in the state Senate now and that he is sure of acceptance.

State House of Representative fiscal analyst Kevin Stres said "the legislature will definitely be faced with a decision on the issue within a week."

He said there are a lot of questions about the Michigan Department of Social Services Client

Reportin System and this was a reason the legislature has put off expansion.

He claimed the department's savings "have never been effectively documented," and that "the system increases paper flow."

He added that the House Appropriations Committee did a study on client reporting effectiveness.

"Our results couldn't say if it was good or bad," he concluded.

Grand River Avenue to be repaved

(continued from page 3) Click said although the road work is going to affect the flow of traffic somewhat, we hope there is going to be a minimum number of problems with traffic. But the road is only 28 feet wide," he added, "so it will be touch."

Click said Spartan Asphalt also planned to install handicapped sidewalk ramps at all intersections and would have no problem finishing the project before fall classes begin.

Both Click and Blueher said the road is in very bad repair. Doug Dudley, of the Michigan State Highway Records Department, said the road was originally built in 1925 and has not undergone major repair since 1951.

He said, "The highway department has done some patching in the potholes and stuff like that."

They have also done some minor resurfacing in 1965 and 1971 on the east side, but "nothing major," he said.

Click noted, "The road has been bad for quite awhile. I don't know why it took so long to do this."

The reason, according to Assistant Deputy Director Max Kyde of the Highway Department, is the state, the city and the University have recognized the problem but have not been able to agree on what to do about it.

Kyde said the resurfacing taking place this summer is only an interim repair which will last five to 10 years.

"We're not doing something more permanent because we can't get anyone to agree on what to do," he said.

He explained that the city, the University and the state formed a committee to review the road problem six months ago and came up with four basic solutions.

The city reviewed the committee's solutions and said they wanted further study on the problem. They retained a consultant to draw up alternative plans. "This department felt the consultant's plan wasn't acceptable," said Kyde. "So this was the interim plan."

He added, "The intent is to have it done before school starts."

Three hundred and fifty thousand of the $550,000 will be used for the Grand River Street project.

About $200,000 will be allotted for resurfacing five miles of Onondaga Road starting from a point west of Mason moving south.

The lowest bidder on this project Wednesday was the Rieth Riley Construction Company of Battle Creek.

Contractors of the two projects will be affirmed Friday afternoon.
