Republican tax plan criticized

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A group of Republicans is pushing legislation that would lower the tax brackets for Americans and increase the size of the standard deduction for those who itemize their deductions.

The plan, which was introduced by Rep. Kevin Brady, R-Texas, and Rep. Tom Reed, R-N.Y., would eliminate the tax code's 10% bracket and lower the 15% bracket to 12%. It would also increase the standard deduction for single filers to $15,000 and for married couples filing jointly to $30,000.

The legislation is supported by the NATION, which has been pressing for tax reform for several years. The group argues that the current tax code is too complex and favors wealthy Americans.

On the other hand, the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) has criticized the plan, saying it would benefit the wealthy at the expense of middle-class and working-class Americans.

The tax plan is expected to be debated in Congress in the coming weeks.

Women's abuse center
awaits election, council

By LINDA M. MILLER
State News/Tuesday

A women's abuse center in Lansing has been considered for over a year and was become a reality pending election results and outcome of a proposal by the Lansing City Council.

The proposal, submitted to the Lansing City Council July 5, is recommended a building at 300 West Washington Street to be used as a shelter.

However, a delay is to be expected if it is a proposal by the Lansing residents in the August election before the proposal can be approved by the council.

East Lansing, sponsor of the proposal, said the funds are being raised for and for the shelter.

The City Council will review the proposal at its regular meeting Aug. 2, before the election.

Some other locations have been under consideration for the women's shelter.

In the meantime, plans are being made to continue the existing emergency programs.

VIEWPOINT: FEMINISM

Equality is women defining woman

By ANNE ROSE

I have never attended a university or a high school where there was a distinct student group called a "women's group." In fact, I have never heard of such a group at any educational institution. The reason is simple: there is no such thing as a distinct "women's group."

In the past, a group of women might have formed a group, perhaps to discuss a particular issue or to plan a particular activity. But in recent years, the proliferation of student groups has made it difficult to distinguish between a "women's group" and any other student group. The result is that there is no such thing as a distinct "women's group."

In fact, there is no such thing as a distinct "women's group." There is no such thing as a "women's group."

There is no such thing as a distinct "women's group." There is no such thing as a "women's group."

This is a difficult concept to grasp, but it is a necessary one. For if there is no such thing as a distinct "women's group," then there is no such thing as a distinct "women's group."

"Frank, wake up!"

"What is it?" said Frank, as he rolled over in the dark.

"Wake up!" repeated the voice. "You're going to be late."

"You got me. I'm going to get up," said Frank, as he stumbled out of bed.

After a while, he emerged from his room, looking a little disheveled. "Good morning," he said to the people who were already there.

"Good morning," they replied.

"So, what's going on today?"

"We're going to have a meeting to discuss the budget," said one of the people.

"Okay," said Frank. "I'll be there."
British Open and St. Andrews: they always fit together perfectly

One day a number of years ago, in a bar not far from the open sea, Sam Snead, golf's pupil, was discussing the British Open with his friend and fellow American, Bob Rosburg, the former St. Andrews champion. Snead was talking about the Open, the great preoccupation of British golfers, and how the players loved it. Rosburg, a man of few words, simply nodded his head. "Yes," he replied, "they love it. They love the Open, and they love it because it's the Open." And Snead, who is a master of understatement, replied, "Well, it's not a bad one, I suppose."

The British Open is more than just a golf tournament. It is a celebration of golf, a time when the world's greatest players gather to compete for the greatest prize in golf. It is a time when the world's greatest courses are put on full display, and the players are reminded of the beauty and challenge of the game. It is a time when the history of golf is celebrated, and the legend of St. Andrews is remembered.

The Open is not just a golf tournament. It is a celebration of the game, and of the players who love it. It is a time when the world gathers to see the best of the best, and to watch them battle for the greatest prize in golf. It is a time when the history of golf is remembered, and the legend of St. Andrews is celebrated.

And so it is that the British Open and St. Andrews are always a fitting pair. They belong together, and they are a reminder of the beauty and challenge of the game. They are a reminder of the history of golf, and of the legend of St. Andrews. They are a reminder that the Open is not just a tournament, but a celebration of the game, and of the players who love it.

New county nature area features hikes, canoes

By MARY L. CULLEN
State News Staff Writer

In the months of January and early February, the Washtenaw County Parks Department is prepping nine of its parks for the opening of the county’s newest nature area, a large preserve in the western portion of the county. The park, known as the Washtenaw County Nature Area, is the result of a partnership between the county and the state of Michigan, which has provided funding for the development and maintenance of the area.

civil rights commission against voucher plan

localStorage.setItem("hasCapturedScreen", true);

The Michigan Civil Rights Commission has taken a stand against the so-called "voucher plan" for the school finance reform that would permit parents to use public funds to send their children to non-public schools. The commission has filed a lawsuit against the state of Michigan, arguing that the plan would violate the state constitution.

The lawsuit, filed by the American Civil Liberties Union, charges that the plan would allow public funds to be used to support religious schools, which would violate the constitutional guarantee of free exercise of religion. The commission also argues that the plan would lead to the unequal treatment of students, including those who are economically disadvantaged.

In response to the lawsuit, Governor Jennifer Granholm has said that the state will defend the plan in court. However, the commission has vowed to continue its efforts to block the plan, including through legislative action.

Couple gives up jobs for cabin

When Joanne and Steve Battie were offered a job in the West, they jumped at the opportunity. After all, they were tired of the cold winters in Michigan and eager to try their hand at someplace new. They were offered a position as housekeepers at a cabin resort in Washington State, and they jumped at the chance.

They moved to the area in January and quickly got to work. Joanne was in charge of cleaning the cabins while Steve was in charge of maintaining the property. They worked long hours, but they were happy to be doing something they loved.

Their new job was a dream come true, but they soon discovered that it wasn't all fun and games. The cabin resort was located in a remote area, and they were often isolated from the rest of the world.

They had to be self-sufficient, cooking all their meals and doing their own laundry. And they were often on their own during the winter months, when the resort was closed.

But they wouldn't trade it for anything. They found joy in the simple things, like the beautiful scenery and the freedom to explore.
