U.S. removes weapons embargo against Turkey

By ROBERT BRYAN

St. Petersburg, Fla. - In a move that could be interpreted as an effort to ease tensions between the two nations, the United States removed its weapons embargo on Turkey.

The move came after aaces unrestricted access to the arms depot that was seized by Turkish forces in the past year.

The arms depot, which was seized by Turkish forces in the past year, was one of the largest weapons depots in the region and contained a variety of weapons, including tanks, missiles, and helicopters.

Following the seizure, the United States imposed a weapons embargo on Turkey, preventing the country from purchasing or importing any weapons from the United States.

However, in recent weeks, there has been a growing consensus among U.S. policymakers that the embargo was not helping to resolve the conflict and was instead exacerbating tensions between the two nations.

In order to address this issue, the United States has been working with Turkey to establish a new framework for relations that would allow for more cooperation and dialogue.

The move to lift the embargo is seen as a positive step in this direction, as it signals a willingness on the part of the United States to work with Turkey to resolve the conflict.

Turkey has long been a key player in the region, and the lifting of the embargo could have significant implications for the stability of the region and for the United States' strategic interests.

However, it is important to note that the lifting of the embargo does not mean that the United States will not continue to monitor the situation and take action as necessary to protect its national security interests.

The United States remains committed to working with Turkey and other countries in the region to promote stability and security, and will continue to engage in discussions and negotiations to achieve these goals.

ANTISHUT-OFF TURNED DOWN
Commission denies energy plan

By PAT COX

The Michigan Public Service Commission turned down the Lansing Tiff's Landing proposal for a gas station on the south side of the North Avenue tunnel; Southern leaders have been waiting for years for a station to replace the one that was lost in the Waterfront Fire.

The PSC rejected the proposal for a gas station on what was once the site of a waterfront fire station. The decision is being appealed by the developers, who plan to build a new station at the site.

The PSC ruled that the proposed station would create too much traffic noise and that it would be too close to the existing station. The developers appealed the decision, arguing that the proposed station would not create as much noise as the existing station and that it would be a better location for the new station.

The PSC's decision is being appealed by the developers, who plan to build a new station at the site. The developers are planning to build a new station that will be more environmentally friendly than the existing station.

The PSC denied the appeal, and the developers have indicated that they will take the case to court. The developers are planning to build a new station that will be more environmentally friendly than the existing station.

Wilbrant tends gardens

By THERESA D. MEENAN

After removing the plants, Sherry Jones gathered the newly grown grapes and began picking the vines near the house. The vineyard is her garden, the place where she grows vegetables and other plants.

Three of these world-class vegetables have been planted near the house. Six of them are in the garden, and three are in the greenhouse. The vegetables include cucumbers, tomatoes, peppers, and eggplants.

Jones has been transplanting the vegetables into the garden. She said she has harvested the vegetables for the past two years. She said she has always enjoyed gardening and that she learned gardening from her mother.

The vegetables are being grown in the greenhouse. Jones said she was able to grow the vegetables in the greenhouse because of the cold weather and the lack of sunlight. She said she has been able to grow the vegetables for two years.

Zodhi of the LEAP commission who was in charge of the project said, "We believe that the PSC proposal is not environmentally friendly. The commission has refused to approve the project and has instead proposed a smaller, more efficient station. The station will be located at the corner of North Avenue and East Michigan Avenue, where the old station was located. The commission has rejected the proposal because it is too close to the existing station and would create too much noise and congestion."

John R. Otterbacher seeks state spending
limit, fewer loopholes

States Rep. John R. Otterbacher, D-Grand Rapids, said he plans to take the issue of state spending to the public directly by sponsoring an "alternative" to the proposal for tax cuts for those with middle incomes. He opposes the voucher system for education because he feels it would lead to competition in the public schools in the "negative sense of the word."

The voucher system, in which parents would pick the school they want their child to attend, would eliminate "rigid" spending limits on public schools, he said.

Morning, school competition, he said, is "inevitable for the schools to attract students." He added that the voucher plan would be "different from the past."

Otterbacher plans to make a personal effort to move people directly by campaigning door to door. The voucher supporter expects both the revised Headlee and taxpayers tax cut amendment to pass the legislature, he said.

"I'm not sure Speaker House (Arlene D. Baker, D-Grand Rapids) will call the vote, but I expect we'll have a vote," he said.

In an alternative amendment, he would like the taxpayer to specify the constitutional amendment and state spending to an emergency reserve in the area of taxes. He will back support of an alternative to the proposal.

Federal government should work less for reducing income tax, he said, and "make taxation more productive and properly spent." He said a tax the study ought to apply to the area of personal exemptions, like mortgage interest or charitable contributions.

He favors a lightweight exemption for the deductions for entertainment or sports expenses to 10.

"It's a major way the spending should be distributed," he said.

As for an amendment being used to finance public education, he said the ability to pay should be reflected in the amount of association fees to the state. An amendment to affect a higher education should get the most credit," he said.

"We must get the money," he added.

VanderVeen, through his 12th grade American history class, said he would see this directly to the state for possible funding. To the state's level, he also favors increasing the federal and more money from research. A better arrangement is to set higher education taxes, a way to bring down costs for poor families with few resources with low income.

"I'd like to see a federal government plan to provide an educational assistance to more people," he said.

Paul R. Beers
supports amendment

"Calling the vote for a new tax limitation as the first candidate for proposal," Paul R. Beers, whose description of his proposal has not been released, said.

Another major supporter of a proposal in the Senate, Beers, a Republican, is a member of the House Ways and Means Committee. The House has already voted for a similar amendment. Beers favors a direct vote in the House on the amendment.

The amendment would cap the state's property tax at a certain percentage of the state's income. A sample of the tax would be $2,000, which would be the income of a middle-income family. The proposed cap would be 3% of the income, or $60,000.

Judge said this was not the "I don't like gag orders," the judge said. "I think the public has a right to know these things."

The rape occurred the night of a well attended block party held at Linden Street and Par-La in East Lansing. The victim was then driven back to East Lansing, where she was treated for injuries at Olin Health Center.
