Pope Paul VI dies of heart attack

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI, the first and quiet priest who for 26 years led the Roman Catholic Church through times of change and turmoil, died Friday after a brief illness.

The remains of Paul VI, who died today at the Vatican, will be buried in a private ceremony on Sunday.

The president of Vatican City, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, said today that an interdict had been issued against the church for three days to allow for the pilgrimage of the faithful to the Vatican.

The body of Paul VI, who served as pope for 81 days, will be returned to Rome tomorrow for burial in the Vatican.

The president of Vatican City said the pontiff’s death had come as a shock to the world, and that he had been a “selfless servant” to the church.

Fringe parties rap ballot rules

By RON GARELLA
State News/Staff Writer
An informal, non-partisan poll shows a majority of Michigan voters support cropping off the ballot the names of fringe candidates who are not major party nominees. While the Michigan bill isn’t yet law, the ballot issue has the potential to change the makeup of the Michigan general election by allowing voters to cast their ballots for major party nominees only. One way to do this is to lower the number of votes needed to gain a ballot slot.

A poll conducted by the Michigan State University Institute for Social Research shows that a majority of Michigan voters support the ballot measure. The poll, conducted by telephone, found that 57% of those surveyed support the measure, with 39% opposed. The poll was conducted among a random sample of 500 registered voters in Michigan.

The ballot measure would allow voters to reject candidates who are not major party nominees. It would also allow voters to cast their ballots for major party nominees only. The measure would be implemented by the Michigan State University Institute for Social Research, which conducts surveys and research on a wide range of issues.

Michael J. Busch, assistant professor of political science at Michigan State University, said the measure is important because it would allow voters to focus on the issues that matter to them most.

"This is a positive step toward increasing the quality of our democracy," Busch said. "It would allow voters to make informed choices and would help ensure that the candidates who are most likely to win are the ones who receive the most attention and resources."
Grebner's experience should not go unused

The 9th district county commission race appears to be the third most competitive in the county, behind the 1st and 4th district mayoral races. This year's challenger, Mark Grebner, does not look like a stand out candidate. MARK GREBNER has been involved in area politics for a number of years and has previously served on a number of area-wide programs. However, he has not made a substantial effort to gain the attention of voters.

Aside from these minor campaign players, the first thing one needs to know about Mark Grebner is how he lives. He is not a rebel; he is not out to take the power away from the establishment, and he is not sure that he is even interested in running for a Democratic position.

According to Grebner, the county is almost at the end of its financial rope and there is no guarantee of more funding coming in. What is needed is a county council that is able to understand county finances thoroughly enough to know what programs can be cut or made more efficient. Gien his past experiences, he is not sure that he can handle the responsibility of being a county councilor.

Elliot barely edges out with commitment

The Republican side of the 9th district is much more competitive than the Democratic side. The other, a renegade conservative in the local area of conflict, is not a strong candidate. Neither candidate belongs in the county commission race.

PHILIP ELLIOTT is in our choice of this race because of his interest in past experience and past work with students. However, Elliott fails short of being qualified to hold such a position. He does not seem to recognize several important issues in the county. For example, he seems to be a conservative in his approach to the county budget. It is well and good for a conservative to be a county commisioner, but Elliott does not recognize that he has the qualifications to handle the issues of today's day.

A key point in Elliott's campaign is that he is running for the position with only one year left in his term. However, Elliott does not address any of the issues that are currently facing the county.

Gina Torrelli

Torielli and Kinkade are both qualified candidates

Both candidates in the 9th district county commission race appear to be well-qualified individuals. One is a local lawyer, and the other is a local newspaper editor. Both candidates have extensive knowledge of the issues that affect the county. Another lawyer might be useful in the 9th district, but the person with the highest qualifications is Gina Torrelli.

Gina Torrelli is a relative newcomer to the local political scene, but she has screened with some success in her past positions. She is one of the few candidates who are well-grounded in the county and is well-qualified to handle the issues that affect the county.

Rock music and its perils

State

"That's a long time to be a music lover," said the music critic. "It's a long time to be a music lover." I agree. I've been a music lover for many years, and I've always been fascinated by the way that music can affect us. It's a powerful force, and it's one that we need to pay attention to.

But there are some people who I think are a little bit too obsessed with music. They listen to it all the time, and they talk about it all the time. It's a bit much, if you ask me.

But I think it's good to be interested in music. It's a great way to relax, and it's a great way to connect with other people. So I encourage people to listen to music and to enjoy it.

But I do think that there are some dangers associated with music. For example, there are some people who listen to music too much, and they become obsessed with it. They spend all their time listening to music, and they don't have time for anything else.

I think that's a problem, and I think that we need to be careful about how much music we listen to. We need to make sure that we're not letting music take over our lives.

But overall, I think that music is a great thing. It's a great way to connect with other people, and it's a great way to relax. So I encourage people to listen to music and to enjoy it.

Platt named humanities chairperson

By DAVIDE KNOX

Franklin D. Piatt, historian and professor of humanities, has been appointed humanities chairperson by the Department of Humanities at Michigan State University. Piatt's appointment comes after an interview and a review by a committee of educators who investigated his qualifications for the position.

Piatt has a degree in world history and has been teaching history at MSU for several years. He has also been involved in various community service projects and has been recognized for his contributions to the academic community.

Piatt is expected to assume his new role on October 1, 2019. He will be responsible for overseeing the humanities department, which includes the history, philosophy, and literature programs.

Piatt's appointment is a step forward for the humanities department, which has been struggling to attract more students in recent years. The department is hoping that Piatt's expertise and experience will help to revitalize the program and attract more students.

Piatt said he is excited to take on the new role and is looking forward to working with the students and faculty to develop new courses and programs.

Piatt's appointment is part of a larger effort by MSU to improve its humanities offerings. The university is investing in new faculty positions and has recently launched a new humanities major.

This is a significant step in the right direction for the humanities department, and we are confident that Piatt will be able to lead the department to new heights.

Piatt's appointment is a testament to the university's commitment to excellence in education. We are proud to have him as a member of our faculty and look forward to seeing the progress he will make in the humanities department.
