Bylaws change rebuked

MSU Trustees Monday night had their say on the changes in the university's bylaws, but in the end, they were rebuked.

At its April meeting, the board had approved changes to the bylaws. The trustees have been working on the changes for several months, but the board decided to put the changes on hold until the trustees could have a chance to review them.

Last week, Huff told The State News that the board had an obligation to approve the bylaws, which were drafted by the trustees. However, he said that the board had a responsibility to the university's students and faculty members to ensure that the changes were beneficial.

The board decided to delay the vote on the bylaws until the trustees could have a chance to review them. The trustees have been working on the changes for several months, but the board decided to put the changes on hold until the trustees could have a chance to review them.

Gasoline shortage gets worse as Eastern stations stay closed

By BERT A. ROSS

As Easterners ran out of gasoline yesterday, President Nixon and the Administration acted to keep the East from becoming another Detroit.

Nixon tightened the imported gasoline quota to 5.1 million gallons a day from the Middle East, and ordered a shutdown of all refineries.

The move came as Congress was set to vote on a resolution that would have prohibited the sale of gasoline to the East.

The President said the shutdown was necessary to ensure that the East would have enough gasoline to last through the winter.

Black enrolls down

By DENNIS PETOSKEY

Michigan State University's campus police are trying to get ahead of a growing problem on campus. The number of black students has dropped over the past two years.

MSU President John R. Bursch said the drop was a result of the university's efforts to improve campus life for black students.

Bursch said that the drop in black enrollment was part of a larger trend in the United States.

"We have been working on this problem for a long time," Bursch said. "But we are not doing enough to improve the situation."
Uganda's fencing favors elections

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) - Uganda's two main political parties are vying for the support of the country's ethnic minority groups, according to a recent poll. In the survey, conducted by the Uganda National Council on Social Protection, the Muslim-party-led National Resistance Movement won 65% of the vote, while the Kibera People's Party took 30%. A third party, the National Democratic Party, received 5%.

The survey found that the Muslim party's message of peace and unity resonated with ethnic minority groups, who make up a significant portion of the population. The Kibera People's Party, on the other hand, focused on economic issues, appealing to a wider electorate.

The results are expected to shape the outcome of the upcoming general election, which is scheduled for next year.

Israelis bomb Palestinian schools

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) - Israeli jets bombed two Palestinian schools in the West Bank on Monday, apparently as part of a wider campaign to silence criticism of the Palestinian Authority. The schools were bombed twice, once in the northern West Bank town of Nablus and once in the southern West Bank town of Hebron.

The Israeli military said the bombing was in response to the activities of Palestinian militants who had attacked Israeli settlements in recent days. At least 10 people were killed in the attacks, and dozens were injured.

The British government has condemned the attacks, and the United Nations has called on Israel to refrain from using force against civilians.

Divers find sealife under Arctic ice

WASHINGTON (AP) - Divers have found a sealife menagerie under the ice in the Arctic, including walruses, sea lions, and polar bears. The divers, who were working for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, made their discovery off the coast of Baffin Island, Canada.

One of the key findings was a large group of walruses hauled out on the ice to rest and sleep. The presence of the walruses is rare in the region, and their discovery is significant because of their importance as an indicator of the health of the Arctic ecosystem.

The divers also found a group of sea lions huddled together, possibly for warmth or protection.

Townships' incomes greater than expenses, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) - Townships in the nation's heartland are doing well, a new report says. The report, released by the U.S. Census Bureau, found that townships have a median household income of $55,000, compared to the national median of $41,000.

The report also found that townships have a higher percentage of employed people, with 65% of the workforce employed, compared to 60% in the rest of the country.

The report's lead author, Dr. Robert S. Jaffe, said the findings show that townships are doing well and are important to the national economy.

The UNHCR urged Malaysia to reconsider its policy and allow the refugees to land. The UNHCR also called on other countries to provide assistance to the refugees, who are facing starvation and other dangers at sea.

Hispanics and media discuss stereotypes

BY MICHAEL WALTERS

Members of the Hispanic community and Michigan media organizations gathered recently to discuss current problems regarding how Hispanics and the media view one another. The following are excerpts from the discussion.

"We are here to change Hispanics' minds about the stereotypes of needy people and change the media's所谓 about the stereotypes of Hispanics, said Eduardo Delgado, president of the Michigan Hispanic Journalists Association. "I think the problem lies in the principle speakers addressing the Hispanic community," Delgado said.

Another participant, Daniel Lopez, publisher and manager of Hispanic Times, publisher of the San Antonio Enquirer, Lopez said Hispanics are tired of the "voice of the outer world" being delivered to them through the media.

"In reality, the entire project was very important to the people present," Lopez said. "Hispanic lack enough literature, presence and voice."

One of the main problems surrounding the media and Hispanics is the lack of information on the Hispanic community and the Hispanic community's perception of the media.

"It is amazing to me how little is known about the Latino community in the U.S.," said Delgado. "If you were to ask someone what is known about the Latino community, a national Hispanic population, it took part of several dozen, obviously it would have to be English or Spanish. He said the lack of information is because of the poor perception of the media's Hispanic influence and the age of the United States."

The speakers outlined their ideas for changing the media's perception of Hispanics and the Hispanic community. The speakers also listed a number of solutions to the problems, including the formation of a Community Relations Bureau to involve the Hispanic community in the United States. The bureau would work with the United States and Hispanic media groups to educate the Hispanic community on the issues of national unity.

Trustees need investment advice

Former MSU trustee board chairman Warren Huff brought some improved stability to the board of the last few weeks. The trustees were violating their own bylaws, underfunded by, relinquishing their authority to some donors and banks for the University, Milliken, investment firm, Snider, Stevens, and Clark. The board, however, had always brought the finances to the point of bankruptcy in January, granting the investment firm full power in deciding how to invest.

The board's action has neither been vindicated itself according to the strategy of dividing the board among those with nearly equal power, nor has it created a vacuum in the University's areas, nor has it brought the University to the brink of bankruptcy. The board wanted to reinvest the University's stocks in areas that would provide a more reliable return for the MSU, but should not be expected to earn on such a financial recommendation as Snider, Stevens, and Clark were hired by the University for their expertise in handling investments, and that expertise should be put to use.

The need for a powerful but needed measure

Gus William G. Milliken put his signature on a state security bill Thursday deluging almost dictatorial powers to Michigan's chief executive in dealing with possible state emergency situations that may arise. The legislation is a big tough approach to the state's emergencies, but an approach in which the University does not play a significant role.

The bills empower the governor to impose mandatory emergency regulations, which the state has talked about along. Some may conflict at times with current state laws, but allows the governor to make necessary decisions in areas of current events. It also allows the powers to implement and hold meetings in which anywhere from 2 to 20 people may be kept at the University's discretion and without the governor's knowledge. The bills, however, are not necessary to implement them, even what would be a state level emergency. The bills may as the state the power it needs to enter a state law emergency.

As a result of the bill, the governor would declare a state of emergency lasting 30 days unless supported by any authority. During this time, Milliken would have the authority to restrict the interior living conditions, including buildings, as defined by the authority to keep vehicles on the road. Milliken would also have the authority to lower or raise the general Milliken of the state, but in no way the powers of the governor.

The powers have been designed to keep any powers of the governor, which would result in any laws being passed in the state. The governor's purpose is to keep the general interest of the state. The governor, however, is not necessary to implement the powers that the governor has at his disposal. Under the bill, the governor would declare a state of emergency lasting 30 days unless supported by the governor himself. During this time, Milliken would have the authority to restrict the interior living conditions, including buildings, as defined by the authority to keep vehicles on the road. Milliken would also have the authority to lower or raise the general Milliken of the state, but in no way the powers of the governor.

In 1970, a trial in the MSU Student Court was held against Edward B. Saks, an assistant professor of economics, who was charged with violating the Student Rules of Conduct. Saks was found guilty of violating the rules, and the Court ordered him to pay a fine of $1,000.

The case was handled by the Board of Trustees, which recommended that Saks be suspended for one year. However, the Board of Trustees overturned the decision and reinstated Saks. His suspension was later upheld by the Michigan Board of Regents.

Mastroianni and Antonelli shine in Vacario's erotic ‘Wifemistress’

BY ERIK D. BAKER

Laura Antonelli and Marcello Mastroianni give Sex, an entertaining performance. "Wifemistress," a Quelcresto Film of the Campus Theatre. The Italian film, written by Rodolfo De Simone and directed by Mario Vaccaro, is a delightfully entertaining and amusingly erotic story of deceit, seduction, and passion.

It is a modern-day drama set in Italy, where Mastroianni, a successful businessman, becomes involved in an affair with Antonelli, a woman he meets at a party. He becomes enamored of her and begins to plan a way to get rid of his wife. He sets up a situation where he can separate Antonelli from her lover, a leading businessman, and take advantage of her situation.

The film is a study of love, passion, and the complexities of relationships. It is a commentary on the nature of love and the ways in which it can be manipulated and controlled. It is a film that explores the consequences of love and the ways in which it can lead to destruction.

Grover’s full group grooves in Detroit

By ROGERINALD TOLU

This review has seen Grover Washington Jr. in concert on three occasions in two different states. Washington has put on a consistently good show on each occasion. This time, however, the audience was a bit more subdued.

The concert began with a set of blues in a less than satisfactory manner. The audience was not particularly engaged and seemed to be waiting for something better. However, the second set, which was filled with a variety of blues styles, received a much warmer reception.

After the third set, the audience began to move around, and some members of the crowd started to join in. Washington was in his element, and the crowd responded well. The concert ended with a encore, featuring a number that was not on the set list. The audience was thrilled, and the music was perfect.

Washington has a unique style, blending elements of jazz and blues. His vocals are powerful and emotive, and his musicianship is top-notch. The ensemble is tight, and the energy is high throughout the entire performance.

From late December through the spring of this year, these three stations posted the highest gas prices in the Lansing area due to a "no-buy" by service stations. That's a last-minute supply of gasoline for the entire United States, matching the Energy Department's maximum estimate of the shortage in April and May.

Energy Department experts said they had already recently noticed the downward trend of oil prices. The national average for unleaded has dropped 25 cents since mid-May, but the number of stations offering the discounted prices is still minimal.
