

PRISONERS OF WAR—
Ten years ago this week the 27th and 33d divisions captured these German prisoners, the first taken by those outfits in their terrific drive against the Hindenburg line. This long line moved past Reisel, France, on Sept. 29, 1918.

AT THE BASE OF DEAD MAN'S HILL, near Chattancourt, Illinois wounded were carried on litters by German prisoners on Sept. 26. The casualties were from the 132d infantry of the 33d division.

MORE PRISONERS—Enlisted men of the 132d regiment—formerly the 2d Illinois infantry and detachments of the 7th Illinois infantry—marched these captives past this desolate spot near Chattancourt, Meuse, France, on Sept. 26, 1918.

BRUSHED BY DEATH—
A 9-inch shell pierced shelter tent, blanket, and raincoat just after two members of the 42d division had left their supposed protection. The scene was Essey, France.

SALVAGE SQUAD No. 3, 42d division, posed at Essey with this captured German gun. Apparently there wasn't much left to salvage.

WAR-TORN PANNES, Meurthe-et-Moselle, France, was wrested from the enemy by the 167th and 168th regiments of infantry on Sept. 12. This is how the town looked a decade ago this week.

TEN YEARS AGO TOMORROW the 117th ammunition train was encamped at the foot of a hillside near Essey, Meurthe-et-Moselle. With the bales of hay for the horses and mules, and the covered wagons and the railroad track, the tented city looked almost as peaceful as an American construction camp.
