POLICE AND FIRE DEPARTMENTS.

One of the most interesting and important changes in the history of the city was the formation of the Police Department in 1833. This was caused by the need for more order and discipline in the city. The early years were marked by corruption and inefficiency, but the department improved over time.

CHICAGO'S FIRST PICTURE-TAKER.

It was in 1857 that Chicago's first professional photographer, John J. H. Whipple, opened his studio on the corner of Dearborn and Adams streets. He was one of the most well-known and appreciated photographers in the city.

PIONEER READERS OF THE TRIBUNE.

There were a number of people in Chicago who were avid readers of The Chicago Tribune. One of them was John B. O'Connor, who began buying the paper when it was only a few years old. Other notable readers included A. C. Richardson, the founder of the Chicago Board of Trade, and A. A. Studdard, the first mayor of Chicago.

LONG GONE DAYS KEPT IN MEMORY.

The old Chicago Fire Department was also a part of the city's history. It was established in 1833 and played a crucial role in the city's development. The department faced many challenges over the years, including the Great Chicago Fire of 1871.

RAID ON TRIBUNE OF CHICAGO.

In 1897, there was a raid on The Chicago Tribune's offices. The raid was led by a group of men who were upset with the paper's coverage of a local issue. The raid resulted in the destruction of some of the paper's records.
