

In the LIMELIGHT

Mrs. Prentiss Coonley and her two daughters, Alice and Eleanor, exhibiting their Shetland ponies at the Lake Forest county fair. Eleanor (on the right) says the pony is merely playful.

Edward Salisbury, a Chicago boy (Harvard '08) who, as section-commander of the American ambulances of Pont-a-Mousson, knows how it feels to be under shell fire. The photograph was taken of Salisbury while he was in Paris on a week's leave. He is one of twenty-eight Americans, mostly college men, who are acting on the French front as masculine angels of mercy.

(Photograph sent from Paris by Sterling Heilig.)

Miss Aimee Clarke, who has become a fully qualified nurse and is now busily at work tending to the Australian wounded in a hospital near Brighton. The bird? You're not in style at all now, you know, unless you have one of these pets about.
