

PICTURESQUE CHICAGOLAND—A snow-mantled ravine on the grounds of a new hunt club near Seneca, seventy-five miles southwest of Chicago. A group of Illinois sportsmen plans to transform the grounds into a game preserve. Quail, pheasants, wild ducks, and the like will be raised by the thousands.

(Color-photo by Godfrey Lundberg.)

A MILLION DOLLAR MONUMENT TO HISTORY—The Chicago Historical society hopes to start work this year on its new building, to be erected in Lincoln park, near North avenue and Clark street. The structure will be of brick, with limestone trimming, and of the Georgian colonial style of architecture. The three floors will be devoted to portrayals of epochal periods in the life of Chicago and Illinois. This is the proposed east elevation, facing the St. Gaudens statue of Lincoln. The architects are Graham, Anderson, Probst, and White.