

CHICAGO'S HEALTH BOARD IN 1874—This interesting old photograph, which recently came to light, shows Mayor H. D. Colvin and his health officers of the city of fifty-eight years ago, which then embraced an area of thirty-five square miles as compared with the territory of 210 square miles of the present city, domiciling a population of less than half a million as against the three and a half millions of today. Seated in this picture from left to right are James A. Hahn, M.D., president of the board; J. W. Russell, secretary; Ben C. Miller, M.D., superintendent of sanitation, and Mayor Colvin; standing are John Reid, M.D., health officer; Joseph McDermott, Moses Hook, and George B. Schloetzer, M.D.

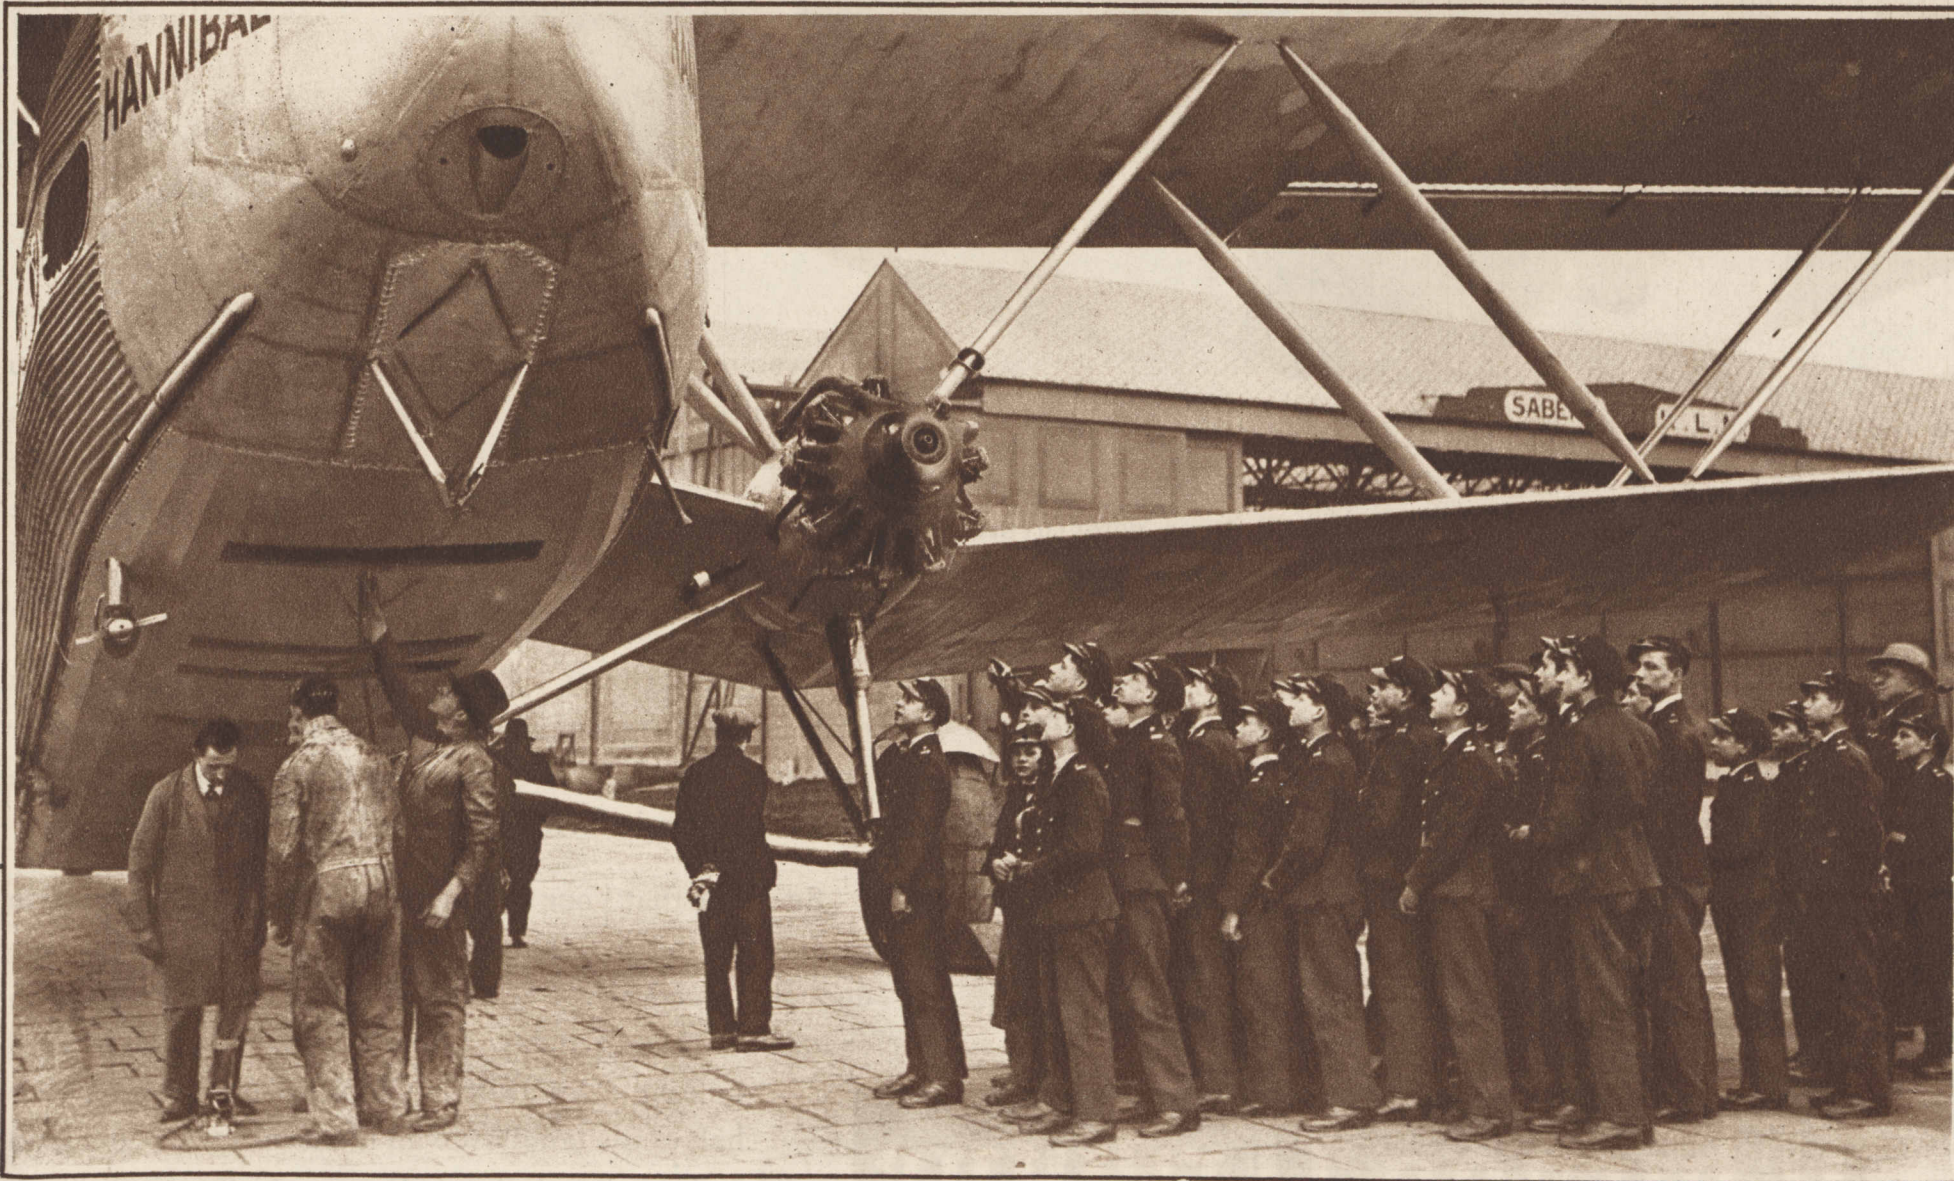

THE GENTLEMAN AT THE RIGHT, who is seen "bulleying-off" at the start of a hockey match at Fulham palace, London, is His Grace, the Bishop of London, who this month celebrates his seventy-fourth birthday.
