FILMDOM'S SCENE STEALERS

WHEN BIT PLAYERS ECLIPSE THE MOVIE STARS

Remember hysterical Dame May Whitty in "Night Must Fall"? Frank Jenks, the singing cab driver, in "100 Men and a Girl"? Barney Siegal's "ugh-ugh" Indian in "Wells-Fargo"?

Scene stealers all, say the movie stars. "It's larceny," they cry. But fans from coast to coast applaud real talent wherever they find it.

In Sunday's COLOROTO GRAPHIC, Ed Sullivan reviews the exploits of Hollywood's expert scene stealers—Frank Morgan, Basil Rathbone, Akim Tamiroff and many others. Read this inside story of Hollywood's bit-players whose contribution to the movies the industry is just beginning to acknowledge. Many photos.
