

Building with Chicago Business Since 1863

The Bank's first building, Clark and Lake streets, occupied July 1, 1863.

Third building, of typical Romanesque architecture, was erected at Dearborn and Monroe streets in 1882.

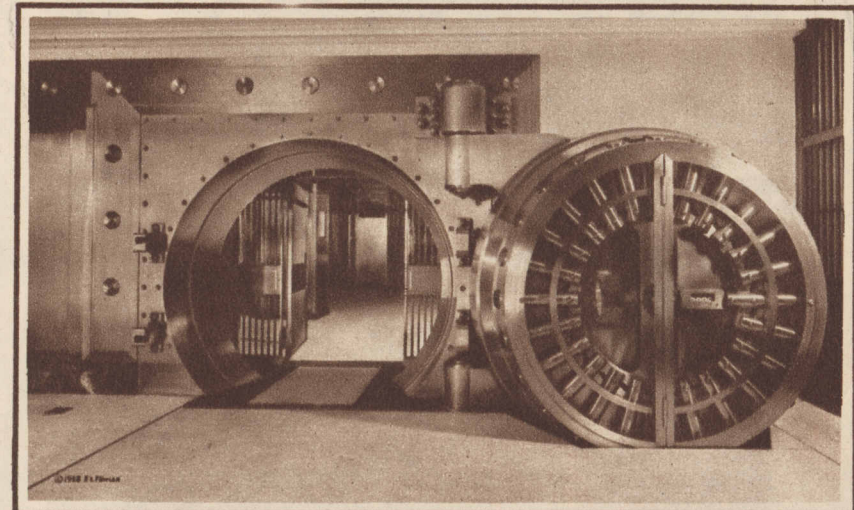

Second building of the First National Bank, State and Washington streets, built in 1868 and restored after the great fire of 1871.

First National Bank Building, Dearborn, Monroe, and Clark streets.

Left—Central court of the First National Bank of Chicago looking toward the Dearborn street entrance.

One of two fifty ton doors at the entrance to the great vault of the National Safe Deposit Company.

View from the central court, showing tellers' cages, with Department for Women in the background.

Beauty of line and marble—a vista of unusual charm.

THE First National Bank of Chicago, First Trust and Savings Bank and National Safe Deposit Company, announce the completion of their building program and extend a cordial invitation to inspect their new banking rooms and vaults during the week of April ninth, when an historical exhibit will be on display.

These new quarters facing Dearborn, Monroe and Clark Streets are finished in white marble, bronze and mahogany and afford every facility for the transaction of financial business.

Officers are readily accessible and are prepared to extend the seasoned counsel and ready co-operation, which, since the organization of the bank in 1863, have marked its relations with Chicago business.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO

Affiliated

FIRST TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

Left—Central lobby of the Savings Department extending from Dearborn to Clark streets, on the ground floor.

Right—Where the bank's contact reaches out to all the world—Foreign Banking Department.