

1892—This Currier & Ives print shows the city of little over a million in an artist's bird's-eye view looking west from a point over Lake Michigan.

(Reproduction by courtesy of Harlow McDonald & Co., New York.)

1932—An airplane view of the same scene as that above. The city's population has trebled in the forty years spanning the interval between the production of these two pictures.

(Photo copyright by Chicago Aerial Survey company.)