

IT TOOK TWO AND A HALF YEARS TO GET THIS PICTURE, says our veracious correspondent. The horned chaps are wild mountain goats at their favorite salt lick in Glacier National park. The little feller at the left is a hairy marmot, or whistler. These animals fly at the approach of man, but a lonely telegrapher fooled 'em. He hooked up an alarm clock to operate a camera, and after many tedious experiments the timed camera finally caught this dandy photo.

(Photograph copyright by J. R. Buhmiller.)

THE SHEPHERD LEAVES HIS HILLS to talk to countless thousands over the radio at Kansas City. The bearded party here is Uncle Ike Morrill, the 88 year old postmaster at Notch, Mo., up in the Ozarks. He is said to have been the inspiration for the Harold Bell Wright novel, "The Shepherd of the Hills." (Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)

PARIS SOLVES A PARKING PROBLEM by providing this municipal bicycle garage at Vincennes, a suburb, for its thousands of pedal pushers. Just an ordinarily busy night provided the great array of bikes you see here. (Photograph from Acme.)

NINETY THOUSAND CROWDED INTO WEMBLY STADIUM to watch the Boltons and Manchester Cities battle for the soccer championship of England. That was shortly before the big strike, and 'tis said twice as many would have been present had there been room for them.

(Photograph from International.)