If there's one thing the Chicago Tribune has proven in its 140-year history, it's that building on a tradition of excellence naturally leads to greater achievements—achievements like a Pulitzer Prize for Explanatory Journalism... the Eastman Kodak Color Award for the best color reproduction in North America... technological feats, like satellite transmission throughout the Midwest and low rub ink so readers' hands stay cleaner.

These are just some of the examples of recent Chicago Tribune achievements, and they were all inspired, in part, by the readers and advertisers who give us their unfailing support and constructive criticism. Our thanks to both; they make us proud of our past and optimistic about our future.
