

colonel has got." It brought down the house.

A true representative of American thought was the picture drawn of the Tribune by Gen. Wood, a paper which fought the New Deal from its start against an entrenched bureaucracy, and never pulled a punch.

Smear artists and cynical columnists were lambasted by the general in a few pungent sentences. At the end of his speech THE TRIBUNE had advanced in 100 years from "Thunderer of the Prairie" to the voice of the midwest and the nation.

Extolled in Toasts
Toasts were given by four speakers. Mayor Martin H. Kennelly called THE TRIBUNE a living link with the past which has played a forceful role in all major events of the city, America and the world. He spoke of its 100 years as a fighting newspaper, and said its power and influence is attributable to Col. McCormick. With reliable Irish wit, which delighted the audience, he made light reference to Tribune cartoons in the mayoral campaign.

Americans love nothing better than a first class fighting man, Gov. Green told the banqueters, as he proposed a toast to Col. McCormick for the battles he has fought and won, and those he will fight and win in the struggle for human freedom in the next century.

Response by Col. McCormick
Responding to the toasts, Col. McCormick said he had been deeply touched by a message from an old friend, Frank B. Noyes of the Washington Star, who for 38 years was president of the Associated Press. Mr. Noyes said that although the minds of the two men had not always tracked, he rejoiced that they held each other in affectionate esteem and confidence.

Mr. Noyes wrote:
"Col. McCormick, ladies and gentlemen:

"My dear Bert—It is a source of real regret to me that I am unable to be present personally to congratulate THE TRIBUNE on its lusty age, but even more that I cannot give you face to face, the affectionate greetings of a friend of many, many years.

"I knew THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE when Joseph Medill still was its head and I met, grew to know, and admire you when, in your young manhood, you headed the sanitary district of Chicago and courageously incurred the opposition of THE TRIBUNE to the course you followed in that important public duty.

Always Held in Esteem
"While in the long years since then our paths have been intertwined constantly, our minds naturally have not always tracked, and, indeed, more frequently they have not tracked.

"I rejoice that we have always held each other in affectionate confidence and esteem. I do not wish to let this occasion pass without paying tribute to others of the Medill dynasty: to Joseph Medill Patterson, who has now passed on, but was one I loved and respected, and to his sister, 'Cissy,' who, with all her charm, is still a journalistic thorn in my side.

"I wish to THE TRIBUNE the fullest measure of continued success and to you, Bert, all the happiness that can come to a man."

Departs from Prepared Talk
Col. McCormick said he had a prepared address but so much had and I went up to see Joe Patterson

"I LEARNED in the law and in history, gifted with scientific and technical foresight, honest friend of honest men, unyielding in opposition to corrupt men, defender of the American republican form of government, you have maintained your principles in the columns of THE TRIBUNE, your faith on the battlefield and your opinions on the public platform.

"To you whose life is dedicated to the proposition that fearlessly to inform men is to make men free, your fellow citizens pay tribute, on this, the 100th anniversary of THE TRIBUNE's founding."

This is the text of the testimonial which was presented to Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, by the Civic Centennial committee at banquet commemorating this newspaper's 100th anniversary last night.

been said by other speakers that he felt it necessary to make some extemporaneous remarks. He referred to the congratulatory messages from Gen. MacArthur and from Gen. Charles P. Somerall. "In 1918 Chauncey McCormick and I went up to see Joe Patterson how to organize an indestructible, unconquerable organization."

Concerning these and other tributes, the colonel said that he could only pray that he would be able to accept them with Christian humility and that he would be able to live up to them.

Speaks for Departed
Col. McCormick recalled that he was the only one left of the group of young men who took over THE TRIBUNE with him, the late Joseph M. Patterson, Max Annenberg, William Field, Bert Macfarland, and Dan McMahon, and said: "I am speaking for them and representing them."

"Time was when only people of English ancestry were thought to be competent to write editorials. Men with names like Raymond and Blake. Now we have editorial writers named Stolz, Aton, and Morgenstern. Among our editorial writers are two Jews, one Catholic, and several heretics. This does not mean that they were selected for those beliefs.

"I want to say one thing about the editorial writers which they won't agree with and that is they are not always right. I have the assent of Mayor Kennelly in that expression. But views must be expressed, they must be talked out so that errors can be found."

Celebration Continues Surprise
The colonel remarked that the Centennial celebration had been a continual surprise to him. He said he could understand that THE TRIBUNE itself might put on its own show in honor of the event, but that this assembly of civic leaders would join in the Centennial celebration as a demonstration of good will was "beyond my egotism."

At the beginning of the speeches, Gen. Hammond, toastmaster, said he was recently asked by a newspaper reporter to give his opinion of Col. McCormick. "I told the reporter that I admired the colonel, that I thought he had just plain guts. The reporter replied 'We will call that courage. But I told him' to me it's just plain guts."

Gen. Hammond said he wanted to pay tribute to another great person, the late Joseph Medill Patterson, who was a battery commander in the Rainbow division in which Hammond also served.

Unable to Invite Many
"The country needs more men like Col. McCormick and Capt. Patterson," he said. "Everybody in this audience is a distinguished guest and I'm sorry we had to turn down many who wished to be here."

Sen. Brooks [R., Ill.] paid tribute to Col. McCormick in a toast speaking of his relentless dedication to individual liberty, personal freedom, the Constitution, and the republic.

Gov. Ralph F. Gates of Indiana remarked that the day for Hoosiers out his way would be incomplete without THE TRIBUNE, and proposed a toast that the first 100 years may be only the beginning of a period of service which will last as long as newspapers and men exist.

The crowd of more than 2,000 which overflowed into the balcony of the grand ballroom, included only 12 women, who were present by special invitation of the civic centennial committee. Among them were Mrs. McCormick, Mrs. Hammond, Mrs. Wood, and Mrs. Julius Miner, wife of the judge.

BUSINESS GIVES ROSES, SCROLL IN TESTIMONIAL

Chicago business joined the salute to THE TRIBUNE and Col. McCormick at the Civic Centennial banquet thru David Mayer, president of Maurice L. Rothschild and head of the Chicago Better Business bureau. At the conclusion of his address, he presented an illuminated scroll and 100 roses, each of the flowers typifying a year of Tribune accomplishments. Mayer's speech followed:

"The organization that I represent tonight, the Chicago Better Business bureau, is tireless in its effort to see that people get their rights . . . and their money's worth. I don't know of any man, or any institution, that has done a better job of both than Col. Robert R. McCormick and THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

Scroll and Roses Tributes
"And because of our kindred aims and our kindred ideals, the Chicago Better Business bureau wishes to express its admiration and respect for Col. McCormick and THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE with this hand illuminated tribute. In presenting it, I'd like to tell of how THE TRIBUNE grew from a circulation of 400 to well over a million daily, and 1 million 500 thousand on Sunday. I'd like to tell of the hand presses that grew to the great batteries or rotaries of today. I'd like to tell how Col. McCormick stepped in at the age of 31 and stepped up THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE to the great newspaper power that it is today.

"But I feel that this great armful of roses that I'm presenting to Col. McCormick, with this illuminated tribute, says rosier things about him and THE TRIBUNE than I ever could. At first, we thought we'd like to have each rose represent a fine deed or great accomplishment of THE TRIBUNE. But we found that there weren't enough greenhouses to produce that many roses.

Lists Some Tribune Triumphs
"For there would have to be roses for the part THE TRIBUNE played in the election of Abraham Lincoln.

"There would have to be roses for THE TRIBUNE's unending fight for freedom of the press.

"There would have to be roses for THE TRIBUNE's part in the establishment of R. O. T. C. and roses for Col. McCormick's own distinguished service in the armed forces. "There would have to be roses

CENTENNIAL EDITION CAN BE MAILED TO ALL PARTS OF U. S. FOR 10c

Chicago readers of THE TRIBUNE may order copies of today's Centennial edition mailed anywhere in the United States or its possessions and Canada for 10 cents a copy. Orders for mailing may be addressed to the Tribune circulation department or may be made in person at Tribune Tower or at the Tribune Public Service office, Madison and Dearborn sts. No orders can be accepted by telephone.

THE TRIBUNE will also accept orders for mailing the edition elsewhere in the world. The fee will include postage at the rate of 1 1/4 cents for each two ounces, plus 4 cents. Early editions weighed 17 ounces.

for THE TRIBUNE's drainage canal fight . . . its boulevard link campaign . . . its demand for the electrification of railroads. Roses for the Golden Gloves . . . the Silver Skates . . . roses for the all-star baseball and football games . . . roses for the Tribune Charities and Music Festivals.

Leading in Patriotic Works
"There would have to be roses for Col. McCormick and THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE for the dramatic way they helped the War Bond and recruiting drives . . . and the Red Cross campaigns.

"There would have to be roses for the architectural beauty of Tribune Tower and Tribune Square . . . roses for the W-G-N radio station. There'd be roses for THE TRIBUNE's great Canadian timberlands and paper mills . . . roses for its greatest-in-America advertising volume.

"There'd be roses for its ideal relationship with this vast organization's employees . . . and its development of rotogravure and color in newspaper printing. And there would have to be roses for the character of the man who has never quit fighting, and never will quit fighting, for the land he loves so well . . . our America.

Great Personal Honor
"As you see, there would be so many roses that this room couldn't hold them all. So we are presenting an even 100 . . . one for each year of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE's deed-packed history . . . and they too, emphasize just what this hand illuminated tribute does:

"Col. McCormick's love for his native Chicago . . . his love for his America . . . and his love for the rights and liberties of his fellow men."

TRIBUNE AD MEN GIVE PLAQUE TO COL. MCCORMICK

A copper plaque bearing the signatures of 441 members of the Chicago Tribune advertising department was presented yesterday to Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE.

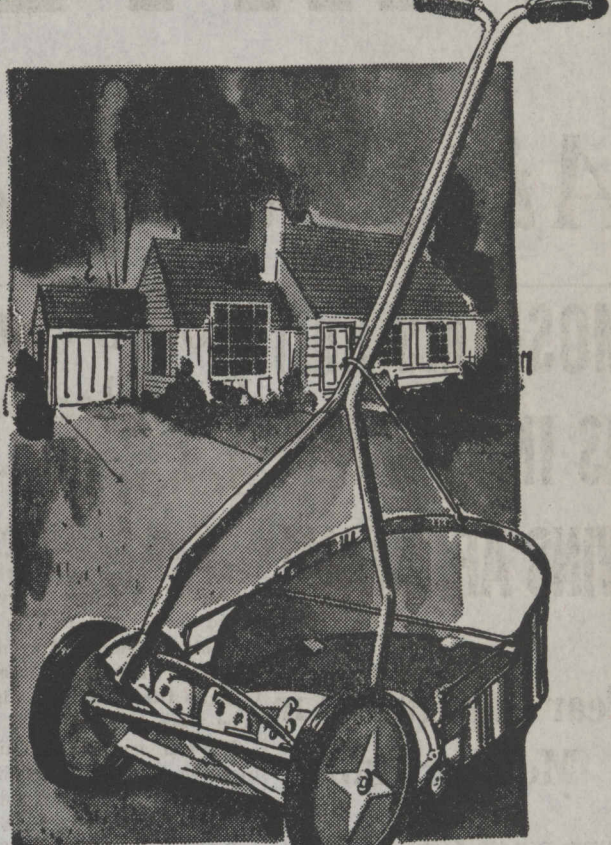

A message engraved on the plaque offered congratulations to THE TRIBUNE for the contributions it has made to the city, state and nation in the last 100 years, and expressed admiration and affection for Col. McCormick, who has guided THE TRIBUNE to its period of greatest achievements.

"Practically all of us began our association with THE TRIBUNE since 1911," the message continued. "Because of the friendly relations which have at all times existed between us and him, we look upon ourselves as associates, rather than as employees of a corporation or of an individual."

Representatives of the six divisions of the advertising department attended the presentation ceremony.

Lyons & Healy

Everything Known in Music
WABASH AVE. AT JACKSON BLVD.

June 10, 1847-1947
Today, Chicago will take time out to sing a verse of the Anniversary Song in honor of the 100th birthday of the Chicago Tribune . . .

November 4, 1864
Though scarcely a month old (our birth date is October 14, 1864), we knew a good paper when we saw it . . . and we promptly "learned to talk" the language of selling music in the Chicago Tribune on the morning of Friday, November 4, 1864.

and ever since, Lyons & Healy and the Tribune have been telling America about the lasting joy of music . . . which, we are sure, has brought many happy returns to all.
