By Philip Kleinsey

Tribune's United States, labor editor, has written a book on the Tribune's history, "The Tribune Story," which gives an account of the newspaper's history. He has also written a book on the history of the American Press Association, "The Press in America," which has been published by the University of Chicago Press.

The Tribune was started in 1867 by J. H. Longfellow, the first editor, and has been in continuous publication ever since. The newspaper has been owned by the McCormick family since 1888.

The Tribune's chief editor has been Alfred H. Blodgett, who has been in charge of the newspaper since 1892.

The Tribune's masthead has been "The Tribune," which has been in continuous publication ever since.

The Tribune's headquarters are in the Tribune Tower, a building located on the corner of Chicago and Elgin Streets.

The Tribune's present editor is Charles R. Adams, who has been in charge of the newspaper since 1930.

The Tribune's circulation is about 500,000 copies per day.

The Tribune's advertising revenue is $10 million per year.

The Tribune's editorial staff consists of 200 people.

The Tribune's newsroom is located on the 20th floor of the Tribune Tower.

The Tribune's pressroom is located on the 19th floor of the Tribune Tower.

The Tribune's printing plant is located in North Chicago.

The Tribune's staff includes a variety of positions, including editors, reporters, photographers, and designers.

The Tribune's chief photographer is John L. Smith, who has been on the staff since 1980.

The Tribune's chief designer is David A. Johnson, who has been on the staff since 1985.

The Tribune's chief editor is Charles R. Adams, who has been on the staff since 1930.