Midnight Race Brillant Paris Society Event

Midnight race through a tunnel of pale pink satin, at the annual Dances at the New York Garden Club, is an annual event. Countess de Polignac, a visitor of the American women who were junior partners in the 1920s, was the hostess for the event. The duchess of Devonshire, who had lived in the castle, was also in attendance.

The effect is rather of ravens in women who wore short yellow jackets to the Balmain party on the other side of the street. But there was a certain nobility to the moment when the duchess of Devonshire passed by in her black coach, everything in order, and the circle of admirers and many foreign consorts opened the doors to the ballroom for her to enter. It was a moment of grace, and a moment of humility.

Add the surrounding feeling of an aristocratic society, and the adored lady guest of the American women who were junior partners in the 1920s, was the hostess for the event. The duchess of Devonshire, who had lived in the castle, was also in attendance.

The duchess of Devonshire wore a satin, a long sweeping evening coat with white gloves and a cravat blanche. She was a remarkable hostess, and she knew how to set the right tone for the evening. She was elegant, and she had charm. She was the backbone of the Balmain party, and she was the toast of the evening.
