

A NOTED LONDON PUBLISHER, Lord Beaverbrook, is visiting the United States with his two sons, Max and Peter (sitting). Lord Beaverbrook owns the London Daily Mail and several other British journals.

(Photograph from Acme.)

THE GRAND PRIX DE ROME for this year went to Rene Letourneur of Paris for his statue of Judith, pictured here with the sculptor. M. Letourneur is a pupil of the famous Jean Boucher, and his work is winning him fame throughout Europe.

(Photograph from Wide World.)

KOSCIUSZKO'S MONUMENT AT CRACOW, POLAND—It is made of soil from various battlefields of the American revolution on which the Polish hero fought in the struggle for our independence. Soil from Saratoga, Yorktown, West Point and Old Star Fort, South Carolina, has been carried to Poland for this memorial. This picture shows the dedication of the unique monument.

(Photograph from Wide World)

FIVE BILLION BEES are being sold or traded this year in the village of Veenendaal in Holland, which has the only public bee market in the world. From all sections of the country the bee farmers arrive, carrying their hives with their thousands upon thousands of bees. The market is held once each year.

(Photograph from International)

DARING DEATH ON MONT BLANC, Europe's loftiest mountain peak, which towers 15,700 feet. Scores of lives have been lost in the grand crevasse, pictured at the right. It is a declivity in the glacier at the foot of the peak. The scene at the left shows a party of climbers crossing the Bridge of Snow at the Grand Mulets, the half-way point in the two-day climb to the peak. (Photographs from Pacific and Atlantic.)

